In the foregoing are presented the facts of the Japanese claim to a Greater East Asia Co-Prosperity Sphere in contrast with the policies of Britain and America which are opposed to those of Japan. The conclusion reached is that unless the Pacific question, pregnant with such opposition and friction, is first settled, it is impossible to build up the Greater East Asia Co-Prosperity Sphere under contemplation.

Shoppers Jam N.Y. Stores

United Press

NEW YORK, October 1.—Stores were jammed yesterday with persons buying furs, liquors, jewelry and other luxury items which today will be subject to the 10 per cent new Federal excise tax. It was estimated that more than $1,000,000 worth of liquor was bought in New York alone on Monday. Fur merchants described the throngs of women in their stores as "terrific and tremendous."

Y.C.A.C. CRICKETERS DEFEAT EMBASSY 11

All-Day Match Staged at Club Grounds on Sunday

The Yokohama Country and Athletic Club cricket team gained its first victory over the British Embassy eleven this season by 115 for seven wickets to 47 in an all-day match Sunday at the club grounds. The diplomats had won the first two games, while the third had ended in a draw. Sunday's match was the last cricket fixture at the Y.C. and A.C. this year.

The embassy players bat first and the side was dismissed by 12:15 p.m. for 47 runs. The home team then commenced its innings, and by the luncheon interval at 1 p.m. had made 14 runs for one wicket. The Y.C. and A.C. declared when it had made 115 for seven wickets at 3:40 p.m. When play was resumed after tea, the visitors scored 75 for eight wickets before stumps were drawn.

Fine Performances Seen

Fine performances were turned in by several players on both teams. Outstanding was J. A. Sargeant's 50, retired, which played a big part in gaining the victory for the Y.C. and A.C. He also bowled well taking three wickets for 15 in the first innings and four for 18 in the second.

M. Parsram was at the top of his form in the first innings, getting six wickets for 20 runs, an average of 3.33 S. Stephens, captain of the Y.C. and A.C. cricketers, established a record by securing two diplomats' wickets in the second innings with the only four balls he delivered in this stanza, for no runs. He also appeared well set for a good batting score when he was out at eight on a spectacular one-handed catch by J. R. V. Mason.

F. R. Harriss, G. L. King and P. H. Lord also bat well, for the home team, making 15, 12 and 12, respectively.

Mason's 28 in the second innings was the top score for the embassy side, while Eckersley also did well in this stanza, making 19. Major K. S. Himatsinhji, captain of the visitors, was their high scorer in the first innings with 13, and he obtained 12, not out, in the second.

B. Kuskie also established a record at the club on Sunday by bowling six consecutive maiden overs. M. J. K. Stark proved the most effective bowler for the diplomats, taking three wickets for 26 runs. The opening Y.C. and A.C. batsmen could not score a single point against the deliveries of these two bowlers until midway through the sixth over.

Three Unable to Play

Three embassy cricketers who had participated in former games were unable to play, these being P. H. Gore-Booth, F. H. Moysey and H. T. Langstone, and their presence may have helped the Tokyo side considerably.

Both H. W. Eckersley and G. Meadows played well behind the wickets. M. Ellerton acted as one of the umpires while G. H. da Costa kept score, and their assistance was much appreciated by the players.

Civilians Captured in Karelian Districts Interned

Transocean

HELSINKI, September 27.—The civilian population found by Finns in the conquered Karelian districts has been concentrated in camps, the largest of which is at present housing 2,000 persons.

It is declared that the civilian population—which consists mostly of women, children and old people—is composed of various nationalities.

Thus, in the camp housing 2,000 there are 10 different nationalities represented. Persons of Finnish descent form only a fraction of the inmates.

Finals in International Lawn Bowls Of Y.C.A.C. to Be Played Saturday

Both the Born-in-Japan and Canadian teams scored victories in the Yokohama Country and Athletic Club international lawn bowls tournament over the weekend to gain places in the finals of this event, which will be played off Saturday at 2.45 p.m. on the club green.

The B-I-J quartet handed the Canuck squad its first defeat this year Saturday afternoon, 22 to 16, and thereby established its right to be the sole remaining team in the upper bracket. The latter four finished off its match with the Continentals Sunday morning, and the Canadians came out on the long end of the 21 to 11 score.

In Saturday's contest the winners obtained a 4 to 1 lead soon after the start, but their opponents gained the upper hand on the next few ends to secure a 13 to 6 advantage.

The B-I-J squad fought hard and finally regained the lead at 17 to 16 after 18 ends, and obtained single points on the next two. The Canadians still had a chance on the last end, but the opposition made three to decide the issue.

Playing for the B-I-J were S. Stephens, F. J. da Silva, F. R. Harriss and P. H. Lord, while Canada was represented by Mrs. J. O. Lloyd, H. Lefebvre, G. E. Beatty and C. Heseltine. Da Silva played the best for the B-I-J, while Heseltine stood out for the Canadians.

On Sunday morning the Continentals and the Canadians played off the remaining five ends of their match which darkness halted a fortnight ago. Although the losers outpointed their opponents by 3 to 2, the latters' 19 to 8 lead on the first 16 ends gave them the victory.

The Continental four consisted of Miss T. Planas, D. Dentici, E. Dentici and K. F. Wersum, while the Canadian contingent was the same as in Saturday's match.

U.S. REALTY PRICES UP IN 58% OF CITIES

Rise Is Shown in 70% of Municipalities Designated as Defense Areas

United States real estate prices are higher now than a year ago in 58 per cent of the cities of the country and in 70 per cent of all cities in areas designated by the President as "defense areas," says a report published in the N. Y. Herald Tribune, which continues: Turnover is more active in 71 per cent of the cities at large and in 83 per cent of cities in defense areas, according to confidential reports from 211 cities made to the National Association of Real Estate Boards in its thirty-seventh semi-annual survey of the real estate market.

Impact of defense activity shows itself most plainly in residential and industrial real estate as is registered in these important ways:

Increasing absorption of dwelling space, particularly those areas Presidentially-designated as defense areas.

Virtually universal rise in residential construction costs.

Rise in Home Building

Rise in residential rents, but one which in 62 per cent of all cities reporting and in 59 per cent of defense area cities is still insufficient to justify residential building for investment at today's construction costs.

A tremendously significant shift of the great volume of present-day home building to the $3,000-$4,500 price range, with the under-$3,000 house already the commonest type of construction in 7 per cent of the cities, a development of great importance both to defense housing and to the future of American cities.

New industrial construction going on within the past year in 59 per cent of all the reporting cities and in 75 per cent of those that are in defense areas. But usable industrial space still available in 91 per cent of the cities in defense areas and in 84 per cent of all cities reporting.

Drain of workers and their families to defense areas is having definitely adverse effect on some non-defense areas.

New Construction Balance Wheel

Survey findings as detailed in the July issue of Freehold, magazine of real estate, are:

Residential construction costs have increased within the last six months in 99 per cent of the cities of the country and in 100 per cent of cities in defense areas. The median increase has been 10 per cent. Rents for single-family dwellings are higher than they were a year ago in 62 per cent of the cities of the country, and in 81 per cent of cities in defense areas. Increases reported have been ordinarily not more than 10 per cent. The general level has, of course, not increased to this extent. The index of rents compiled by the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics covering 33 cities shows a rise of a fraction over 1 per cent in the year just passed. This index indicates the total level of residential rents has made a gain from the depression low of about 12 per cent.

An under-supply of single-family houses is reported by 57 per cent of the cities of the country and by 70 per cent of cities in defense areas, particularly for new modern low-cost houses. A like survey a year ago, at the time the Defense Commission was set up, showed under-supply already existing in 47 per cent of the cities of the country. Despite some population loss by non-defense to defense areas, only 2 per cent of all the cities now have an over-supply of houses.

For apartments, 48 per cent of cities over the country report a balance between supply and demand, although 37 per cent already have under-supply. A year ago 24 per cent so reported. Apartment surplus exists in 15 per cent of all the cities. In defense areas 46 per cent of the reporting cities state they have too few apartments, but 13 per cent have over-supply.

New residential construction, going on at a rate which in the last twelve months for the first time exceeded the big years of 1926-'29, has been the balance wheel. Since Jan. 1 in the cities surveyed construction of single family houses has gone on at the rate of 2.86 dwellings a 1,000 population, or one new house for every 100 families.

Half City Homes $3,000 to $4,500

What is more, new home building is at last reaching down firmly into the low-cost market. The $3,000-$4,500 house has become the No. 1 house on America's home building program. It has the lion's share of today's construction in 48 per cent of the reporting cities, and in the average city it makes up 50 per cent of the current home building program. The under $3,000 house, which has already become the dominant home building level in 7 per cent of the reporting cities, make up a 5 per cent of present home construction in the average community.

An interesting angle to this, though, is that the price range at which the largest volume of new home building is now being done appears to run higher in cities of defense areas than for the country as a whole. The explanation seems that defense areas include the larger cities, with their definitely higher price ranges and building costs. Of cities in the defense areas, 45 per cent give their commonest price range for the houses now being built as $3,000-$4,500; 3 per cent say it is under $3,000; 36 per cent that it is $4,500-$6,000; 12 per cent place it at $6,000-$8,000, and 4 per cent say the volume is greatest in the over-$8,000 class.

For the nation at large, thirty-four cities out of every 100 say their most active home building is in the $4,500-$6,000 bracket, and only 7 per cent say it is in the range of $6,000-$8,000. Only 4 per cent say it is the over-$8,000 class. Two-thirds of the very large cities given their commonest building bracket as $4,500-$6,000, one-third as $3,000-$4,500.

Taking the country as a whole, the proportion of new houses produced in the $4,500-$6,000 bracket is a median of 20 per cent. In the $6,000-$8,000 group it is a median of 10 per cent. The over-$8,000 house for the country as a whole represents only about 5 per cent of today's home building.

Waseda Meets Hosei In Football Today, At 3 p.m., Korakuen

The 1941 version of the Waseda and Hosei football teams will be on display today at the Korakuen stadium when the two clash in a Kanto Intercollegiate Football League game. Kick-off will be at 3 p.m. Last season, the Waseda gridster dropped but a single contest, a 13-7 defeat at the hands of championship Keio eleven. Hosei is expected to field a small speedy team with veteran Kunimoto, halfback and end Sakumae taking the leading roles. Waseda on the other hand will present many new faces with but quarterback Yasuda left from last fall starting backfield. In the line player-coach Fujioka is expected to lead his charges from the guard position.

U.S. People Are Forced To Face Simpler Life

ducts brought in from abroad may be added to the long list of items where shortages and great dislocations loom. Even in some foods, such as dairy products and concentrated sorts, Britain's lease-lend needs inevitably will bring scarcities here. Soaps can be made from domestic fats; but without a certain percentage of tropical oils it will be necessary to revert to the coarse, unlathering soaps of several generations ago.

Priority Status Given

While the supply of new articles in durable consumer goods is due for sharp curtailment almost immediately, people will be able to keep their automobiles, stoves, water heaters, oil burners and refrigerators in good repair. The Government has given priority status for the upkeep and repair of this type of equipment over all other competing civilian demands. Furthermore, the defense agencies have made emergency allocations for the construction and repair of machinery used by 26 industries in the transportation, communication, farm equipment, school, fire, police and health fields whose continued operation is essential to public welfare.

One economic result of the impending shortages will be a vast increase in customer service facilities. Instead of discarding or "turning in" old cars and household appliances of all sorts, the consumer, of necessity, will call in the repair man and have the old models fixed up to serve out the emergency. The manufacture of parts and the servicing of old equipment will be the chief means by which many manufacturers and retail establishments hope to hold onto at least a part of their organizations "for the duration."

Misuse of Freedom

Transocean

RIO DE JANEIRO, September 29.—"No neutral Power may deliver war materials to a belligerent with impunity on the grounds of its neutrality, according to all the modern interpretations of international law," Professor Renate Barbosa wrote in the Brazilian magazine Cito Dias yesterday. "Any attitude contrary to this is not that of a neutral State. It is a provocation and a criminal misuse of the conception of the freedom of the seas," he added.

NIPPON-F.I.C. MEET IN SPORTS PLANNED

Decoux Backer, Japanese Consul-General at Hanoi Here For Negotiations

Athletic competition between Japan and French Indo-China will be realized shortly to add much to the existing friendly collaboration between the two nations, Domei reported.

Noboru Ogawa, Japanese Consul-General at Hanoi, proposed the duel sport's meet between Japan and F.I.C. to Vice-Admiral J. C. Decoux, Governor-General of F.I.C. some time ago. Governor-General Decoux has accepted the proposal.

As a result of negotiations conducted by Consul-General Ogawa with various quarters following the acceptance by Vice-Admiral Decoux of the proposal, it has just been decided that Japan would, as a first step, send a girls' basketball team of Taiwan to F.I.C. at the end of November this year.

Following this, a track and field athletic team of Taiwan will be sent in March of next year. In return French Indo-China will send its football team.

Consul-General Ogawa, who is now in Tokyo with the object of making arrangements with the Foreign Office concerning his diplomatic business abroad, said to a Domei reporter as follows:

"It is necessary for Japan and F.I.C. to have athletic meets in order to promote friendly relationship. With this in mind I am now working for the holding of a Japan-F.I.C. Olympic Game."

FOOD RATIONING SEEN IN PORTUGUESE TOWN

First Case Reported by Lisbon Newspaper—Shortage Growing

Transocean

LISBON, September 29.—The first instances of food rationing in Portugal were reported from the small community of Elavas, according to a report carried by the newspaper Diario de Noticias. The municipal council at this place has ordered that henceforth no food may be sold without presentation of rationing licenses on the part of the purchasers.

This measure was deemed necessary by the Elavas Municipal Council in view of the ever-growing shortage of foodstuffs.

Shortage is also reported from other parts of Portugal. Particularly rice, oil, and sugar are scarce. Even in Lisbon these commodities are obtainable only with great difficulty.

The growing scarcity of electrical supplies and steadily rising prices have induced the Portuguese Government to establish a new department entrusted with the supervision of trading with metals and metal products particularly in respect to electrical supplies.

OLYMPIC GAMES HEAD REFUTES BRITISH CHARGE

Says Belgian Labor Volunteers Deserving Highest Praise

Transocean

BRUSSELS, September 27.—Count Henri de Baillet-Latour, president of the International Olympic Committee, in an official statement issued yesterday answered the charges which were made by the British radio a few days ago against volunteers of the Belgian labor service who were accused of committing treason to their country.

In his statement, Count Baillet-Latour declared that the Belgian labor volunteers were deserving the highest praise as they act as pacemakers for the new youth whose physical training had been regrettably neglected by the state hitherto. He added that formerly physical training in schools was dependent on political parties in power. This neglect of physical training has brought disastrous consequences, he added.

"It is imperative," concluded Count Baillet-Latour, "that the state take the training of our youth into its own hands."

MORE CONSOLIDATION OF NORWAY STRESSED

Reichs Commissar Promises Nation to Get Independency Soon

Transocean

OSLO, September 27.—That the second year of the new order in Norway might bring decisions both in the inner political struggle of the "Nasjonal Samling" (Norwegian Parliament) as well as in the great battle of the Germanic peoples, was the hope expressed by the Reichs Commissar, Joseph Terboven, when receiving the State Councilors who have now been promoted to the rank of Minister.

Thanking the Reichs Commissar, Minister Dr. Lunde said that the task which had been shouldered by the "Nasjonal Samling" exactly a year ago had not been an easy one but one could state now that, all said and done, it had succeeded in solving this task.

Yesterday's Norwegian press devoted much space to this latest step toward consolidation of new Norway.

The creation of a Norwegian Cabinet was the best proof that Germany intended keeping her promise made to Norway, wrote the Aftenposten.

The paper Fritt Folk declared that all saw from this act that Germany's intentions toward Norway coincided with those of nationalist minded Norwegians, namely, to give the country a completely independent regime.

The Morgenbladet interpreted the words of the Reichs Commissar to the effect that the Fuehrer hoped to be able to entrust the "Nasjonal Samling" with power and responsibility in the course of next year.

The Waseda University eleven opened its 1941 campaign by whipping Hosei, 19-0, in a Kanto Intercollegiate Football League tilt played Wednesday afternoon at the Korakuen stadium.

The Waseda gridsters, runner-ups last fall, drove their way to a score in the first, second and final quarters. Hosei came within a shoe-string tackle of scoring in the fading minutes of the game by opening up with a passing attack. However, a desperate tackle from behind prevented a Hosei pass-snagger from reaching pay-dirt.

Two of Waseda's touchdown came with lightning speed. The first struck after five minutes of play, and the final score resulted from a pass interception. The other tally was a culmination of a steady Waseda drive in the second with Waseda going over from the Hosei 1-yard line.

After Tomishima had carried a punt back to his own 45, in the opening quarter, Tomishima took a reverse and swept to his right. With a host of blockers paving the way he broke in the open and raced to a touchdown without a hand being laid on him. The run was good for 55 yards. Yasuda kicked goal for the extra point.

Waseda scored its second-quarter touchdown on a march from Hosei's 40 yard line, featuring passes by Yasuda and reverse-lateral plays. With Umeda, Tomizawa, Yasuda cracking the Hosei line, Waseda carried to two first downs. One of Yasuda's tosses connected with Nakamura and Waseda was within striking distance inside Hosei's 15.

After stubborn resistence by the Hosei forward wall the Maroons had a first down on the 5. Three cracks and the Hosei line was still holding fast. The scoring play, from Hosei's 2½ yard line, was Yasuda's buck over his own right guard. Yasuda's placement kick just missed, veering to the right.

Hosei's attempt to chalk up a score in the closing minutes of the game with a furry of passes from spread-formation gave Waseda their final touchdown. Backed up within the shadow of their own goal post, Murata, Hosei's left-half started to pass. One was intercepted by player-coach, Fujioka backing up the line, on Hosei's 35 yard line. Racing to his right, Fujioka rumbled unmolested for the score. Yasuda's kick this time hit the uprights bouncing back on the field.

Immediately following the kick-off, Hosei with Murata pitching strikes just missed scoring. On one of Murata's passes, Kunimoto raced down field and taking the long pass was in the open. Almost away, he was brought down from behind. The pass and run was good for 35 yards from Hosei's 27.

Again, Hosei gave Waseda a scare after Kunimoto's catch. End Sakumae this time cut over from his right end position to take Murata toss. With a teammate in front, Sakumae broke into the open eluding two Waseda men. He appeared to be in the clear on Waseda's 35 but a desperate Waseda dive brought Sakumae down on Waseda's 30. Soon after the gun sounded.

The third quarter, found both teams stalemated, with frequent exchange of kicks. Waseda out-kicking their opponents, had the advantage and play took place mostly in Hosei's territory.

Sakumae, Murata and Kunimoto did yeomen work for Hosei, while Waseda revealed a neat change of pace runner in Tomishima. With Yasuda kicking well, Hosei was clearly outplayed in this department of the game.

Newfoundland Is Vital Hemisphere Crossroad

land airport, as a vital crossroads of air traffic, is closer to London by air than it is to St. John's, on this island, by rail. Recently a distinguished passenger left Newfoundland airport on a bomber about the time other passengers boarded the train for St. John's. By the time the train travelers were stepping from their sleepers at St. John's railway station, on this island, the bomber's passenger had been delivered and appropriately welcomed in England.

Five-Hour Flight

From Newfoundland airport to New York is a little over 5-hours flight. By rail from New York to St. John's, Newfoundland, is almost five days.

Portable radio transmitters simplify the problem of communications between military units, between Newfoundland bases and Washington, Ottawa, and London. But even so, the volume of Newfoundland telegraph traffic has swollen so enormously in the past year that an SOS call for teleprinters and other speed equipment had to be sent to the United States.

From the United States, too, is expected to come the additional railway equipment—especially locomotives, freight and passenger cars and tank cars—needed to put the narrow-gauge railway in a position to handle its vastly increased business.

Football in Full Swing

Sakumae, the Hosei left end breaks into the open after taking a pass in the second quarter of the Waseda-Hosei gridiron game played Wednesday at the Korakuen stadium. Waseda whipped Hosei, 19-0. The tilt was the opener for both elevens.

STOCKHOLM, October 2.—"I'm dead sure that Germany will win the war," declared the famous Swedish explorer, Dr. Sven Hedin, to a representative of the Berliner Boersen Zeitung in an interview which was published in today's edition of the paper.

"Germany's actions are always so carefully planned and prepared that their successes are assured from the outset," Dr. Hedin said. "How can Britain and the United States hope to win the war? An invasion of the Continent would merely lead to another Dunkirk. The belief that the time factor is operating in favor of Germany's enemies is likewise an illusion, since Germany now controls the rich resources of the entire Continent and is, therefore, in a position to continue the war for any length of time."

Referring to Anglo-American relations, Dr. Hedin said, "The United States is unable to render Britain more effective assistance than it is doing right now, since American aid to Britain has already reached a point where any further step might involve the United States in a simultaneous war on two fronts, which it is anxious to avoid."

Dr. Hedin expressed his conviction that operations on the eastern front will not come to a standstill in the coming winter. "I know the sort of winter to expect in southern Russia from my personal experience, and I don't believe that winter will bring about a stalemate on the eastern front," Dr. Hedin said.

The famous explorer then expressed the conviction that Germany has been entrusted by Providence with the mission of ridding Europe of the Bolshevist menace. That Germany has tackled also the stupendous task of creating a new order, is a blessing for the world, Dr. Hedin said. This view is shared by a steadily-growing number of people in Sweden and other Scandinavian countries, he concluded.

WASHINGTON, October 5.—Preliminary reports here yesterday indicated that nearly 1,875 military planes were produced in the United States in September, compared to 1,835 in August. Authoritative sources predicted that production would catch up with schedules by the end of the year. About 12,500 planes have been produced in the first nine months of 1941, they said.

BRITON HAS CHANGE IN MODE OF LIVING

Second Year of War Brings Great Revolution in Nation's Economy

Reuters

LONDON, October 3.—The second year of the war has seen a revolution in Britain's economic life. Under the harsh lessons of Norway, Dunkirk and Crete, the Government has resorted more and more to the technique of "Total Warfare."

Indeed, some of the changes have been so deep that many think they cannot be undone at the end of the War, perhaps not even in the lifetime of those now living. On this view, not a man or woman who survives this war will ever again earn and spend his income in the way he freely did before.

Most obvious change is the fact that the number of income-tax payers has been forcibly raised from 2,000,000 to 6,000,000. Once in the net, postwar escape for the e additional 4,000,000 seems quite unlikely, even if the actual burden of income-tax is lowered. This means that for the first time in history, one-fourth of the electorate will learn through the pocket nerve that politics matter.

Second big change has been the establishment of a system of forced loans to the Government imposed upon the income tax payers in the lower brackets, these loans to be repaid at some indefinite date after the war.

During the first year of the War, a working man, married and with two children, earning $23 a week, paid no income-tax at all, but during the last 12 months he has found himself being mulcted (in weekly instalments) of a total of $39 in the form of a forced loan to the Post Office Savings Bank, all of which will be returned to him after the War.

But notice that his neighbor, similarly circumstanced but earning $27 a week (equal to £1 more a week), finds himself mulcted of $96, of which $28 is income-tax and $68 dollars a forced loan repayable after the War. Thus in the lower brackets these increases are very steep, with social repercussions which can now only be guessed at.

For example, consolidating the above two examples, (and taking the £1 to equal $4.00) the working man who by overtime raises his income from $23 to $27 a week—an increase equal to £1 a week for 52 weeks—discovers to his surprise that he actually receives only £28 out of the anticipated £52, for £7 will have been deducted for income-tax and £17 withheld until the end of the War.

Living Cost Rises

By his extra efforts he has increased his total nominal income 17 per cent, but the cost of living—even on the official calculations—has risen at least 20 per cent. Actually he has increased his spendable income by only £28 or less than 10 per cent.

In the last War it was found that it took 500 men and women in the factories to maintain 1,000 armed men in the field. Thanks of course, to the greater mechanization of war today, it has seen estimated that it now takes at least 1,000 men and women in the factories to maintain 1,000 men in the field. Indeed, some think that when Britain's war effort has reached its maximum that the number of factory workers needed will be double the present estimate.

At any rate, this has boiled down to a stiff job for Ernest Bevin, the Minister of Labor. He must mobilize about 3,500,000 men and women, working in non-essential industries or not gainfully occupied at all, and send them—more or less hastily trained—into factories producing airplanes, tanks, guns, munitions and endless other things needed by the Army, the Navy, the Air Force and the Home Guard.

On the whole, there has been less trouble over this fairly gigantic task, than over some other aspects of the war effort, such as the poor distribution of materials, the alleged extravagance of the fighting services and the alleged blunders of factory management.

Most of these 3,500,000 have been under economic coercion rather than direct conscription. For example, the Board of Trade has been busy closing down "redundant" plants in the non-essential industries. Textile workers—finding their plant closing down because it has been deliberately starved of cotton by the Cotton Control, troop down the street to the Labor Exchange and find themselves hurriedly transferred to war work.

In addition, employes in works scheduled as "essential" have found themselves conscripted. They may not leave under the lure of higher wages without express permission, nor, on the other hand, can they be discharged without a full review, by a representative of the Ministry of Labor, of the allegations made against them. This has worked smoothly thus far, though a somewhat similar scheme in the last war was very largely a failure, partly owing to the Government's failure to hold down the cost of living.

Toward the end of the year it was officially disclosed that the "essential works order" operated in 10,049 plants, but the number of employes involved was not stated. It may be well over 1,000,000.

Industry Conscription to Stay

At any rate, industrial conscription has come to stay for the duration of the war.

Machinery for preventing strikes has been vastly stiffened compared with the last war.

Strikes are not crudely prohibited but the law, with typical British obliqueness, makes it an offense to cease work without having referred the dispute to compulsory arbitration. Two cases, one of young engineering apprentices in Manchester and one of engineering shop stewards in London, have been successfully prosecuted by the Ministry of Labor, but the defendants, after formal conviction, were let off with a stern warning. Nevertheless there have been a number of small "lightning strikes" to which the authorities have turned a blind eye. Most of these seem to have been protest strikes against managerial attempts to force the dismissal or transfer of an active shop steward.

On the whole, there seems to have been little unrest due to wages, hours or the "dilution" of skilled labor by the employment of semi-skilleds at lower wages.

But the Government's stubborn refusal to permit local authorities to establish deep shelters—a position from which the War Cabinet has now withdrawn—caused considerable bitterness. In Liverpool, for example, the local authorities sought assistance in building six tunnels in the rocky sub-soil which could house at night the entire army of dockers at work at the port. This was refused, notwithstanding the apparent economy of safeguarding the army of dockers at a cost estimated at only £18 per head. After the big "blitz" on Liverpool, the Government saw the light and issued permission for the construction of one tunnel.

Mr. Morrison's order establishing compulsory fire-watching in all business and manufacturing establishments—including the railways—has also caused considerable feeling. In its original and extremely crude form this meant that an employe was forced, more or less gratuitously, to guard his employer's premises from fire while there was no one, apart from the slender and overworked A.R.P. staffs, to look after his own home and family. This, too, has been vastly improved, for the burden of firewatching has now been placed upon the entire able-bodied population between the age of 18 and 60.

Production Question Problem

But with the workers flowing more or less steadily into the newly opened war factories, how has production fared? This is the biggest controversy on the Home Front.

Winston Churchill, Premier, in one of the longest and most detailed speeches of the war challenged the accuracy of the statement made by Sir John Wardlaw-Milne, M. P. that Britain's current production is only 75 per cent of what it should be. But Mr. Churchill did not offer any other figure. In fact, it is probable that any such figure is statistically worthless, for it means an attempt to average things which are wholly unlike.

Nevertheless, there is a widespread belief that maximum production has not been reached. On July 7 the News Chronicle published a "Gallup poll" of munition workers on this vexed question. Sixty per cent of those rolled maintained the view that full production has not been reached, 24 per cent were satisfied that it had, while 14 per cent were uncertain.

Furthermore, the problem of maximum war production has been confused by a battle between "regionalism"—as the proper form a control—and "centralization" in the person of a Minister for Production what Mr. Churchill called a "super-man."

Mr. Churchill has vetoed the idea of a "super-man" but the drive to decentralize control of output has not yet won out. In one area remarkable claims are made for the success of a local "advisory" board in actually doing things, shifting machine tools from one factory where they were found to be surplus to another factory where they were vitally needed. Sometimes they shifted the skilled workers as well. But this practice is still far from uniform.

The most interesting aspect of this is the rising criticism of the Government policy in placing control of each industry very largely in the hands of its leading industrialists. Sometimes, as in the case of cement and iron and steel, control has been in the hands of the cartel, sardonically described by one writer as "patriotic price rings." In the case of the aviation industry, the Minister for Aircraft Production was constrained to explain in the House of Commons that prices would not be fixed by negotiations with the original aircraft "ring" but by negotiation with the entire expanded industry.

There is a fair amount of post-war political dynamite in this whole situation but in the meantime the whole country seems to be doing the best it can.

BRITAIN MAINTAINS SMALL ARMY IN U.S.

4,000 Are on Staffs of Purchasing Agencies, Besides Other Missions

Because of the steady growth in size and importance of the British Supply Council in America, selection of a successor to Arthur Purvis, the council chairman who was killed in an airplane crash in England, loomed as a major task for the British Government, says a Washington report, dated August 18, to the Baltimore Sun.

The supply council, developing from the British Purchasing Commission which came to Washington at about the start of the war nearly two years ago, has grown into an agency which—somewhat resembling the set-up of United States defense agencies—coordinates the activities of numerous offices in Washington and in New York, employing approximately 4,000 persons.

Mr. Purvis came with the purchasing commission and remained to head the big supply council, and thus was in first-hand contact throughout the mushroom growth of the British agencies in America, which are concerned with war equipment and supplies.

Lord Beaverbrook, Britain's Minister of Supplies, is expected to give some time to the set-up and operations of the supply council.

Plans are reported under discussion for greater centralization of British war orders, in the interest of better coordination with the American defense program and with proposals to send supplies to Russia.

Beaverbrook doubtless will have a voice in the appointment of a new chairman of the supply council, since the position ties in closely with the work which the British Minister of Supplies does in England.

The selection also concerns Lord Halifax, the British Ambassador, who, as a member of the War Cabinet and as Britain's highest representative assigned to the United States, has general authority over the supply council.

On what might be called the immediate staff of Lord Halifax—the embassy personnel—are approximately 50 officers, secretaries and attaches, plus a large number of clerks and stenographers.

The embassy staff is twice as large as it was about a year ago and, although it is a big staff—for an embassy—it is dwarfed by the supply council.

The council and its various units have approximately 1,700 employes in Washington. Because of Washington's shortage of office space, it has been obliged to set up its working quarters here on a catch-as-catch-can basis.

Dozen Different Places

They have a floor in the Willard Hotel; they occupy the apartment building on Massachusetts avenue in which the late Andrew W. Mellon lived; they have offices in other hotels and in any office buildings where space can be found. In all, various agencies can be found at a dozen different street addresses.

This, of course, is in addition to the embassy staff, which some time ago outgrew the embassy buildings. Available houses near by were taken over as embassy annexes, and an addition is being built to the embassy itself.

In New York, the supply council has approximately 2,300 employes. But though its New York staff is larger than its Washington personnel, its office problem has been simpler.

Nearly all of its New York operations are concentrated in two or three buildings in the Broad and Wall Street section.

Staffs at Plants

The Washington and New York offices account for most of the operations. An inspection staff is maintained, however, at the plants with which the British placed their own orders before the lease-lend law went into effect; the inspectors are there to check up on fulfillment of contracts.

The makeup of the supply council illustrates the agencies and activities which come under its jurisdiction. Its members include:

Morris Wilson, deputy chairman; also a representative of the British Air Commission.

Sir Clive Baillieu, director general of the Purchasing Commission.

R. H. Brand, head of the Food Mission.

Admiral A. E. Evans, of the Admiralty Technical Mission.

Sir Arthur Salter, head of the Merchant Shipping Mission.

Sir Henry Self, director general of the Air Commission.

C. D. Howe, Canadian Minister of Supply, representing Canada generally.

Jean Monet, former chairman of the Anglo-French Coordinating Committee, who acts as a general administrative officer on the supply council.

The missions and commissions whose officials are represented on the council account for most of the 4,000 employes in America, with the purchasing commission and the air commission ranking first and second in size.

There also is a military misson, representing the British War Office, and the British Treasury maintains representatives in Washington. Both operate through the supply council.

Also the British maintain what amounts to a joint staff mission, which works with the Embassy and the Supply Council, and is able to discuss, with American officials, questions of strategy and military utilization of supplies obtained.

The Supply Council is primarily an administrative and coordinating agency, established to prevent duplication and overlapping by the numerous missions interested in getting equipment and supplies. The Purchasing Commission also is an administrative body, actually doing no purchasing itself.

Forces Smoother Course

The extensive purchasing which was done before the lease-lend bill was passed (and which continues, through the fulfillment of contracts entered into months ago) was handled by missions representing separate units of the British Government.

Thus the military mission was and is in charge of equipment and supplies needed by the War Office. The Air Commission works with the Air Ministry and the Ministry of Aircraft Production.

The Admiralty Technical Mission deals largely with armament and instruments for naval vessels. The duties of the missions on food and merchant vessels are explained by their titles.

Each of these missions represents a major branch of the British Government in London, yet is a unit of the Supply Council and also is under the general jurisdiction of the Ambassador.

Lord Halifax's additional rank as a member of the War Cabinet has tended to smooth over any jurisdictional questions which might arise from this last point.

If he were just an ambassador, and thus an official only of the Foreign Office, rivalries of the type common to all government services might have developed.

When the British first began placing extensive orders for war equipment and supplies in America, they worked directly with the manufacturers. But as the United States placed more and more emphasis on its own rearming, a coordinating committee was set up in the American Treasury.

As the United States' defense agencies began to spring up, and the lease-lend program was adopted, it became necessary for the various British missions to work directly with American Government officials.

Made Through Hopkins

The result is that while the supply council now makes its requests for lease-lend supplies through Harry L. Hopkins, the units also keep in close touch with officials of the War, Navy, Agriculture and Interior (on oil) departments, the Maritime Commission and the Office of Production Management.

Operation of the Lease-Lend Act hasn't brought about any decrease in the number of British employes in America. Indeed, the number is still growing. This is attributed to the fact that Britain's reliance on American aid is increasing and that the volume of supplies is steadily growing.

Two other agencies are regarded as of first-rank importance by the British, but both function outside the supply council. One is the Office of War Transport, which has the vital job of supervising the shipping which hauls supplies across the ocean.

Its job is to see that British vessels coming into American ports are loaded and turned about as quickly as possible. The war transport group's office is in New York.

The other agency is the Ministry of Information, headed in New York by Sir Gerald Campbell. It takes in the British press service, library of information and the British Broadcasting Corporation's offices. The press service recently set up an office in Washington and one in Chicago.

ENGLAND INCREASING FAT, SUGAR RATIONS

To Give Out More Needed Foodstuffs From November 17 Until March

United Press

LONDON, October 2.—Despite the war entering the third year, Britain is increasing fat and sugar rations from November 17, the Government announced today.

The Government will increase rations, especially of sugar, because of the "improved situation in the Atlantic and the most generous assistance of the United States. We now are in a position to concentrate on supplying ourselves with those things we had to go without so long," the official announcement said.

Regarding staple commodities, Britain in some cases is in a better position than before the war.

On July 7 meat rations were increased 16 per cent, while the Germans decreased their rations.

"We also recently increased cheese rations," the statement added.

"We are the only belligerent country in the third year of war that has increased rations."

Beginning November 17, fat rations will be increased 25 per cent, from eight to ten ounces, and sugar rations will be increased 50 per cent, from eight to twelve ounces. This increase will be continued until March when the strain is the worst.

AMERICA DISPATCHES PARTY TO BRAZZAVILLE

Includes High Officials to Study Ground to Combat Axis

United Press.

WASHINGTON, October 2.—The United States mission en route to Brazzaville, capital of the de Gaulle territories in Africa, includes Army, Navy and State Department officials who will look over the ground and see what can be done mutually for the benefit of the war against the Axis, officials revealed here today.

They emphasized that the Army's interest was above the Navy, and State Department's, but warned predictions as to the outcome of the visit would be "premature."

They said that the mission does not indicate that definite plans have been adopted for closer cooperation with General Charles de Gaulle, or a swing from the recognition of Vichy.

Informed quarters pointed out that planes now were being ferried through equatorial Africa to the Near East front and in future there might be an increase in this traffic.

In that connection considerable interest was evoked by the revelation of a lend-lease agreement with Brazil.

No details were given but it was presumed that the funds would be for a bomber ferry service to Africa.

VARSITY FOOTBALL ENTERS 2ND WEEK

Stanford, National Champs, Beats U.C.L.A. 33-0—Ohio State Humbles U.S.C. 33-0

Football again reigns supreme in America as the second week of intercollegiate competition got underway.

Stanford, the national champions, whipped UCLA 33-0. Only last week the Rose Bowl champions defeated Oregon 15-13.

In the Midwest the mighty machine of Ohio State overshadowed the performance of Coach O'Shaughnessy's boys. Coach Francis Schmidt's eleven this week ran roughshod 33-0 over the once powerful Trojans of USC whose famous coach, Howard Jones passed away.

Notre Dame beat Indiana 19-6. The eleven from South Bend enjoyed a breather last week over Arizona by a score of 38-7.

The Golden Bears from California lost 13-6 to the Cougars of Washington State.

San Jose co-coached by the veteran Glen "Pop" Warner and which was the highest scoring team a few years ago could only tie an unknown Fort Ord aggregation 6-6.

Chicago where football was "de-emphasized" by its brilliant president showed signs of awakening from its football slumber when it held College of the Pacific to a 6-0 score. If this is an indication, Chicago might not turn out to be the "door-mat" of football

Bob Zuppke of Illinois over whom quite a fuss was raised regarding his continuance of his job as coach showed that he still has it in him to produce winners as his boys decisively beat Miami 45-0.

In the South Mississippi State humiliated the Crimson Tide from Alabama 14-0.

Y.C.A.C. IS ALL SET FOR WINTER SPORTS

Soccer and Rugby Games Scheduled at Club Over Weekend

Winter sports will make their debut at the Yokohama Country and Athletic Club this season over the weekend with soccer and rugby games scheduled at the club grounds today and Sunday, respectively.

This weekend's activities at the club also include the finals of the international event in the lawn bowls tourney and a number of matches in the autumn tennis tournament.

The first item on the program will be the only remaining contest in the very successful lawn bowls tourney, in which the Canadian team will play against the Born-in-Japan quartet for the laurels in the international event at 2:45 p.m. today.

Only Beaten Once

Both squads have only been defeated once this season, but the B-I-J team is considered to have the edge over the opposition as it defeated the Canucks by 22 to 16 in a hard fought match last Saturday, when the winners only drew away in the last three ends.

Playing for the Canadians will be Mrs. J. O. Lloyd, H. Lefebvre, G. E. Beatty and C. Heseltine. The B-I-J squad will consist of S. Stephens, F. J. da Silva, F. R. Harriss and P. H. Lord, with D. Abbey as manager

The initial soccer game of the season will get under way at 3 p.m. today with an intra-club match between the "Colors" and "Whites" being scheduled. Captain A. G. Stevens, the soccer secretary, and F. Rodriguez, the captain, are asking all members interested in association football to turn out, with all candidates assured of a game.

Rugby will make its bow on Sunday, with the club fifteen playing against the Koeikai at 1:30 p.m. sharp. With several new players on the squad, the club fifteen's chances of having a stronger team than last year look improved, and followers of this sport are expected to turn out in force for the initial game.

Lineup Is Given

The rugby lineup will probably be as follows:

J. J. Planas; M. L. Russell, G. W. Makepeace, M. Jalenques, E Eastlake; F. R. Harriss (captain), M. J. K. Stark; G. Agajan, M. Pestalozzi, A. A. Weiss, W. Salter, A. H. Ballantyne, F. Moysey and E. Salter. Reserves; P. Shaw, B. Kuskie, F. Rodriguez and Dr. M. Weidenmann.

The hockey and basketball seasons are expected to get under way shortly. The first hockey game will probably be played a week from Sunday, and the initial casaba contest will in all likelihood be held within a fortnight.

Members willing to play American football are being asked to get in touch with J. Pennybacker, the coach, as plans will depend on the amount of support forthcoming.

With all first round and bracketed bye matches scheduled to be played off by Sunday, October 19, it is likely a number of matches in the four events of the club fall tennis tournament will be played off this weekend.

The draws are as follows:

Maritime Commission's Appeal To Serve Democracy's Cause Falls on Deaf Ears

An appeal of the American Maritime Commission for Danish officers and seamen to continue to man their vessels taken over by the United States and thus "serve the cause of democracy" fell upon deaf ears, the Baltimore Sun reports.

The majority of the Danes that have stood by the seven ships of that registry immobilized since the Nazis swept into Denmark, ask strict adherence to the American scale of pay for merchant officers and seamen.

The rate of pay offered, the Danes held, falls far short of the prevailing rates paid seamen on American-flag ships. They hold that transfer of the vessels to Panamanian registry is solely a method of freeing the craft from the provisions of the Neutrality Act.

Want American Pay

They reason that the American scale of pay should prevail in that the vessels will be managed by United States steamship firms, and are to all intents and purposes American-owned.

The men, who declined to sign on at pay scales offered in a special appeal issued by Rear Admiral E. S. Land, chairman of the Maritime Commission, also submitted that officers of various of the Danish ships are entitled to wage differentials growing out of the general characteristics of the most modern vessels in the fleet, because of their comparatively high speed, large power plants and repleteness of cargo-handling facilities.

Release in Washington of the appeal to the Danes, setting forth a number of "concessions" granted to the Danish seamen, brought to light for the first time that officers of four motor ships had detailed to the commission the conditions under which they would take their ships to sea.

5 Conditions Granted

The Maritime Commission, the announcement indicated, granted five of six conditions stipulated, but failed to ratify that which asked wages, bonus, war risk and overtime paid on American-flag ships.

The commission, apparently acting on the urgings of the Baltimore group, forwarded to Washington under date of August 14, the five conditions, which provided for:

1. Recognition of the eligibility for United States citizenship.
2. Consular protection equal to that given American citizenship.
3. The right to pay off and free transportation back to the United States in case a ship changes its flag.
4. Insurance for injuries and loss of life.
5. Payment of allotments in accordance with the wishes of the seamen, and accrued wages.

For weeks Washington officials have known the attitude of the men on the long-idle ships at Baltimore only one of which has put to sea.

Cork Needed

It is understood that officers and men signed on that ship on the urgings that the craft was sorely needed to run a cargo of coal to Lisbon and bring back a cargo of cork, that has been under Government priority. They are said to have protested against the wage scales and asked consideration be given to establishing rates of pay equal to those for American seamen.

Rather than hold up the ship's sailing, the Danes signed on confident that their pleas, plus their show of cooperation by taking the ship out promptly, would be carefully weighed.

Those who now hesitate to sign on, submit that the "least" this Government can do is to grant "equal pay for equal work."

They argue that by signing on the ships they run the risk of losing all right to pensions to which they are entitled upon reaching the age of 60.

They contend that the Maritime Commission overlooks the physical characteristics of the motor ships, whose successful operation on an economic basis requires men of skill and long experience.

For example, they point out that engineers of Danish-flag ships are classified in eight separate groups, according to their individual experiences and the size and character of the ships on which they sail.

A chief engineer's pay under the Danish union agreements ranges, therefore, from 450 to 730 kroners monthly—a spread of more than 50 per cent.

The rates of pay offered are generally in line, the Danes hold, with those set for men operating craft under the flag of the Republic of Panama, and accordingly fall short of American standards.

Several Danes who have reached the retirement age of 60 announced flatly: "We won't sign on."

Would Lose Pension

They declared that if they sailed in the service of "the Allies we will lose all the pension we have worked all these years to earn for ourselves." Under the Danish merchant seamen pension plan the steamship operator and the men each contribute the equivalent of six per cent of annual earnings to build up the fund.

Asked what they proposed to do, those older Danes shrugged their shoulders and responded, "I suppose we'll sign on Swedish ships where there are vacancies and try to get on the other side and then work our way back to Denmark. What else can we do?"

The Maritime Commission's announcement covering the so-called letter of policy, addressed to the masters of the thirty-nine Danish ships taken over under the Ship Requisition Act, emphasized that the Danes "are men without a country."

N.Z. Seizes Finnish Ship

AUCKLAND,—New Zealand customs officials have seized the Finnish vessel Pamer at Wellington, it was disclosed, as a prize of war. It is understood similar steps are being taken elsewhere as a result of Finland's joining the Nazis in their war against Russia.

BIG ALUMINUM JUMP PROJECTED IN U.S.

Plant Expansion, 600,000,000 lb. Boost in Source Material Planned

Close on the heels of the United States Reconstruction Finance Corporation's announcement of financing aluminum plant expansion, the Office of Production Management recommended to the War Department a further increase of 600,000,000 pounds in the annual capacity to produce alumina, the material from which aluminum is derived, says a Washington report dated August 21 to the Baltimore Sun.

William S. Knudsen, the OPM's director, recommended to Robert P. Patterson, Under Secretary of War, that a plant with capacity to turn out 500,000,000 pounds of alumina per year be built in Arkansas, and that another plant, previously recommended for construction in the same State, should have a capacity of 500,000,000 pounds instead of the 400,000,000 first proposed.

Construction of the recommended plants would increase the country's total capacity to 2,720,000,000 pounds of alumina. Two pounds of alumina are necessary to produce one pound of aluminum metal, the OPM explained.

The proposed new construction thus would bring the alumina capacity to within 300,000,000 to 400,000,000 pounds of the total amount considered necessary to produce 1,400,000,000 pounds of aluminum metal per year and to meet the alumina requirements of the abrasives and chemical industries.

Alumina is extensively used as an abrasive and also is used in the chemical industry for water treatment, filtration and other purposes, officials stated.

New Smelting Plants

Further expansion in alumina capacity will be recommended in the near future, it was predicted, either for construction of another new plant or for additions to existing plants.

Jesse H. Jones, Federal Loan Administrator, announced that the RFC's defense plant corporation had entered into contracts with the Aluminum Company of America for $52,000,000 worth of plant construction, including three new smelting plants and one mill for the production of alumina.

The alumina plant involved in Mr. Jones' announcement was the 400,000,000-pound plant which will be boosted to 500,000,000 if the War Department accepts Mr. Knudsen's recommendations.

Mr. Knudsen recommended that the Aluminum Company of America design, construct and operate the proposed new 500,000,000-pound plant together with the plant whose capacity would be increased. Both plants would be financed by the Defense Plant Corporation and owned by the Government.

Would Own Alumina

Under the OPM, the Government also would retain ownership of the alumina produced at one of the new plants, and sell it to aluminum manufacturing companies which will not have alumina supplies of their own.

Both plants would operate principally on low-grade bauxite ores found in Arkansas. Thus their construction would tend to conserve the supply of so-called high-grade ore in that State. Arkansas' reserves of high-grade bauxite are estimated at 8,500,000 tons, and the low-grade ores at 15,000,000 tons.

Bauxite now is being imported from Dutch Guiana at a rate of 1,300,000 tons annually. This importation will be continued, according to present plans, and Arkansas bauxite production will be raised to over 2,000,000 tons a year.

The OPM also recommended to the War Department that the extraction of alumina from alunite be started on a small scale at Marysvale, Utah. This operation would be carried on by Kalunite, Inc., of Salt Lake City, in a plant having a capacity of one hundred tons of ore per day.

In addition to treating alunite, the plant would conduct experiments with aluminous clays, which exist in far greater quantites than any other aluminous-bearing materials in the country.

The production of alumina from alunite or clays has never been accomplished on a commercial scale, but "pilot" plant operations, handling about a ton of ore daily, have been conducted by Kalunite, Inc., for some time.

yours?"

"No, no, I never meant that," pleaded the husband, "I know you are not going, and you would never speak of leaving, if only you knew what I am thinking. It has nothing to do with our love. Here is a man who has lost almost everything in life—friends, relatives, position, and it's a wonder that he has not sunk more deeply than he has. I often catch myself comparing his character with what I might be if in coming years I found myself in similar circumstances. You have an exaggerated sense of shame, Chiyo, for little lapses or weaknesses of men such as intemperance, bad manners, imprudence, lies or borrowing under false pretenses, cheating your friends and benefactors, etc. Bad enough these, of course, but if you only knew the majority of common vulgar men such as we come in touch with, for instance, down in the building sites which I sometimes have to visit—those navies and workmen and those brutish fellows who will fight and murder each other for nothing. If you knew such brutes you would not think so harshly of things our Uncle has been doing. You were brought up in a wealthy, respectable home like a person dressed in white silk, so that the slightest blot must appear like a shameful stain. You don't know human nature, or the human nature of men. Take the majority of my superiors at the office—I mean managers and directors—they do carry on behind the scene of office routine things, which, if they were bared to the public eye, would shock the respectable world. Cheating and lying, bribing and corruptions, double-crossing and stabbing in the back—and that sort of thing is not uncommon among those so-called upperclass decent people. We are all brutes in some sense or other when we are down under fortune's wheels, but we become angels when good fortune blows our way. After all, the partition between brutes and angels is very thin, and our uncle is not half as bad as he might have been. He has not gone about swindling people or stealing my or your things and selling them or that sort of thing. Besides, I am experimenting——."

KEIO AND ST. PAUL'S IN CRUCIAL CONTEST

Fall Season Big 6 Ball League Features 3 Games at Meiji Shrine Stadium

Games Today

Waseda vs Hosei, 10 a.m.
Meiji vs Imperial, Noon
Keio vs St. Paul's, 2:30 p.m.

The fall season of the Big Six university league swings into the homestretch today with three tilts at the Meiji Shrine stadium. Waseda and Hosei first take the field at 10 a.m. followed by the Meiji-Imperial clash, and the Keio vs St. Paul's game.

Greatest interest will be focused on the Keio-St. Paul's tilt. Keio, undefeated is gunning for the championship and by taking this game is practically "in." St. Paul's on the other hand can wrest the leadership away from Keio with a victory today.

Right-hander Yamamura is expected to take the mound for the Mita nine, while St. Paul's in all probability will respond with their ace-hurler, Yoshimura.

Hosei, the Spring champion will be out to redeem themselves against Waseda. With but a single victory in three games, the defending champions must score a win to remain in the upper bracket.

The hard-hitting Meiji nine should encounter little trouble from the Imperial nine. Doormats of the league for the last three seasons and still without a victory this season, Imperial should have no better luck against Meiji today.

TIMES BOOK SHELF

Warfare of Nations

Heer un Volkerschicksal. Betrachtung der Weltgeschichte vom Standpunkt des Soldaten, by A. von Paplikowski-Cholewa, publishers R. Oldenbourg, Muenchen. 2nd impression. 496 pages with 31 sketches. 8.50 RM.

While in former times world history was often considered even by leading historians to be an undiscriminating collection of events ranged together in order to give a more or less waste survey of chronology, an entirely new consideration came into use by the influence of the first World War. To describe the greatness or decline of nations to explain the unshakable belief on the mission and future of a people, finally to point out the right of living of other nations was the general tendency of post-war times, when the mankind seemed to be inspired by the feeling of peace and evolution after four years of dreadful war.

Current historians like to speak of the career of successful or tragic figures in past and present times, thus cultivating the worship of great men, a predilection expressed by numerous biographies of Napoleon, Kemal Ataturk, Ibn Saoud, not to mention the well-known leaders of world policy of today. There can be observed one peculiar fact regardless of the times: Rise and decay of nations is to be decided mostly by warlike events. We can deplore this appearance but we must recognize the existence of this irrevocable law of any historical development.

War and History

Indeed, looking at the world history from this point of view, we find nothing but an endless series of small and great wars, the shortest lasting one day only, the biggest more than 100 years. This undeniable importance of military forces at the disposal of a state for the purpose of warfare induced a retired German captain to make a special study of the influence of warfare in the field of politics. He spent more than 25 years of profound inquiry of the reports left by great historians as well as by military experts. As he says, to much attention was paid to the political ideas or to the dynastic history, while the great wars and conflicts were discussed chiefly in relation to their causes.

Thus, the author laid the foundation to a "military contribution to the world history," which is more than actual in the present struggle of nations. We find many interesting details of the military organization from the old Chinese until the modern Japanese warfare, from the ancient Greeks until the first World War. Military history begun with the evolution of the specially military function in a tribe or nation, expressed by the separation of a warrior class. First in history of civilization appears an army system in Egypt. The country possessed an army capable of waging war in a regular fashion, divided into separate arms, these being chariots, infantry and archers.

The armies of Persia consisted mainly of cavalry which contributed much to the famous victories of Cyrus the Great enabling this ruler to found a world empire. Greece represented a congeries of city-states, each with its own citizen-militia. We omit the medieval mercenaries, the crusades and the condottieri, attributing a decisive part of historical outcome to the introduction of a standing army, practically always at war strength and entirely at the disposal of the state. The reorganization of the military establishments by Louvois may be taken as the formal date, at which standing armies came into prominence.

Other powers imitated rapidly the French example, for the defects of enlisted troops had become very clear, and the possession of an army always ready for war was a marked advantage in policy. Very interesting is, what the writer has to say in relation to the genius of Frederic the Great and Napoleon, the military career of both was very different from those of their predecessors. Both achieved results out of the proportion of those imagined by contemporary soldiers, due to an all overshadowing firmness and energy in managing political activity in connection with a surprising rapidity of military movement. One of the last chapters of the book is inquiring the reasons of the Far Eastern conflicts with a special interpretation of the powerful Japanese military system.

Surprising Results

The results gained by the comparative study of warfare during a period of more than 4,000 years seem to be quite amazing. The author is successful to demonstrate to the reader, that the principles of warfare" or modern times are nearly equal to that of previous periods, in spite of the perfection and completion of all technical methods. There is no big difference, whether the enemy is to be attacked by arrows or rifles, by snipers or hand grenade-throwers. Although it is a general belief that the development of the methods and means of warfare in the present time has reached a seemingly unprecedented degree, the author is right to state, that the principles of modern army system were practiced already in very remote periods of history.

For modern division of the army forces is the same like under Alexander the Great, the wellknown fighting plan of Schlieffen was to be derived from the battle of Cannae, where the largest army Rome has ever gathered on any battlefield was completely surrounded and huddled together in a helpless mass through the ingenious maneuvers of Hannibal. Fire-arms were used by the old Indians some 2,000 years ago, gas as an efficient weapon of war was introduced by the Red Indians of Venezuela in their battles against the Spaniards, and long time before them by the old Chinese armies.

Thus, the military history of all times becomes a measure not only of the art of war and of political life, but also a document of some cultural achievements of the ancient peoples. Military affairs are, to speak with the author, the basis of the historic development of mankind, and the conclusion of the writer deals with the old political wisdom of Rome, to prepare and elaborate the arrangement for rapid mobilization in peace while during a period of war people have to hope for a satisfactory and long lasting peacetime.

Jewels of Spirit

"DIE DSCHUNKE." Deutsche Monatsschrift in Ostasien, published by Erich Wilberg, Peking-Paomachang. Verlag der Pappelinsel-Werkstatt. 30 FR. a year.

There is a general opinion that periodicals would fulfil their literary task only by a true reflecting of the spiritual interests and achievements of the present time. As political as well as technical sciences seem to influence and occupy the most of our attention, their uncontested predominance in the leading periodicals of all countries can never be denied. We are so acquainted with this uniformity and monotony of the present spiritual life, that we hardly are aware of the matter. Therefore, any exception deserves our friendly and helpful assistance, because to devote himself exclusively to the promulgation of spiritual culture means a personal sacrifice, at least today, which will be not rewarded but by the elevating consciousness to do a highly necessary work.

There can be not the slightest doubt, that sooner or later our present spiritual culture will be replaced by other contents, because we have a justified hope of the return of normal conditions of life as soon as the world war will be over. How we imagine this renewal of culture, may be learned from the new periodical published by the German poet and writer Erich Wilberg in Peking. As the wellknown editor affirms, his literary activity is devoted entirely to the spreading of a real cultural knowledge expressed not only by the great German classics of the past centuries, but also by all imperishable representatives of western and eastern provenance.

As orient and occident can never be separated, but are destined to demonstrate a spiritual unity, Mr. Wilberg is dealing with the culture of Germany, Japan and China, so different each from the other, in order to strengthen the spiritual interests of these nations which have so much given to the mankind. We discover among the contributions of the periodical, called "Die Dschunke," real literary jewels, i.e., an extract of the famous description of Japan written by Engelbert Kampfer (1651-1716), dealing with the "origin of Japanese," we read the correspondence existing between Frederic the Great and Voltaire, we accompany Erich von Salzmann in his trip through China and Central Asia, we find a short biography of Tschaikowsky, Chinese poems masterly translated into German by Vincenz Hundhausen, one of the closest collaborators of "Die Dschunke," we enjoy the sonnets of the Polish poet Mickiewicz; essays of Baudelaire, we meet Rabindranath Tagore, Richard Wilhelm, Holderlin, Ferdinand Gregorovius, not to speak from Weimar and other places of world culture. Thus, the service rendered to the limited circle of interested people in East Asia is never to be enough appreciated. May the nice blue books find a welcome in the library of all who share the ideal to be familiar with the great classics of all nations and of all times.

Contemporary Japan

and force of patriotism in England, which appears in a 13th century English poet thus:

"England is a well good land, I ween of all lands the best," grows ever brighter as the most precious jewel in man's soul as revealed by Shakespeare and Milton, and under the fiery test of the last war enabled the soldier-poet Rupert Brooke to write:

"If I should die, think only this of me:
That there'a some corner of a foreign field
That is for ever England."

Six articles remain which lack of space makes it impossible to treat individually: "Diet Members Unite" by Shoji Iizawa shows the "League of National Service Parliamentary Members as an auxiliary force, invested with political power of the National Service Association, which forms the counterpart of the government"; "General Seishiro Itagaki" by Kinjiro Ito is a study of the new Governor-General of Chosen; "Timor and Macao" by Takeshi Yanagisawa deals at length with polotical power, of the National with the position of these two Portuguese colonies in East Asia; "Japanese Chess" by Yoshio Kimura, with numerous interesting diagrams, should be of great interest, especially to foreigners; so also "Western Music in Japan" by Mitsuru Ushiyama; and lastly a staff correspondent gives an excellent account, with many photographs of experiments, of "Dr. Sasaki's Researches on the Causation of Cancer."

Finally, all the regular features appear, March of Events, Extracts from Japanese Periodicals, Book Reviews and Current Events. (P.)

MUSIC NOTES

Musical activities in Tokyo will be practically at a stand-still during the coming week, as no concerts had been scheduled for the middle of the month in anticipation of the air raid drills which began today. Only the weekend will see the resumption of concert activities with two popular musical entertainments.

At 2 p.m. today the Uyeno Academy of music will prerent a repeat performance of its 84th periodical orchestra and chorus concert held Saturday evening, at the Academy Concert Hall. Professor Helmet Fellmer will conduct an all-Beethoven program, including the "Coriolanus Overture" the Piano Concerto No. 1 in C major, and the Ninth Symphony "Choral". The soloists include Miss Ruriko Tominaga, piano; Miss Hideko Yamanouchi, soprano; Miss Shizuko Chiba, alto; Takanosuke Watanabe, tenor, and Teiichi Nakayama, baritone.

An autumnal "Light music Festival" will be staged at the Hibiya Public Hall, 6 p.m. Saturday, October 18, under the auspices of the Musashino Association. Among the artists appearing in the program are Ichiro Fujiyama, popular baritone, with his "New Century Band;" Miss Noriko Awaya, acclaimed blues singer, and her ensemble; Katsuhiko Haida and his Moana Glee Club; Miss Tsuyako Utagami, soprano, assisted by the Festania Ensemble, and the Shochiku Light Music Orchestra.

Yoshie Fujiwara operatic tenor, and Miss Miho Nagato, concert and opera soprano, will be presented in a "Home Front Service Concert" for the benefit of wounded Japanese soldiers, sponsored by the Shirayuri (White Lily) Association, 1 p.m. Saturday, October 18, at the Nihon Seinenkan. The two singers will be accompanied by the Tokyo Orchestra playing under the baton of Toroku Takagi. Miss Mieko Takamine, singing screen star of the Shochiku Company, will act as the chairman, introducing the following assistant artists: Koichi Sugii and his Novelty Quintet; Hisashi Moriyama, singing with the accompaniment of the Columbia Recording Orchestra conducted by Ryo Watanabe; and Miss Harue Wakabara, soprano, leading the White Lilians.

The date of the New Symphony Orchestra's 229th Subscription concert, marking the second program of its Mozart Cycle commemorating the composer's 150th death anniversary, have been changed in connection with the air raid drills, to Sunday, October 19, and Monday, October 20. Attention is also a called to the fact that beginning with the coming concert the starting hour has been advanced by 15 minutes and that performances will start at 7:15, at the Hibiya Public Hall.

Under the direction of Joseph Rosenstock, the following program will be played: Mozart, Overture to the opera, "The Magic Flute", and Symphony No. 40, in G minor; Schumann, Piano Concerto in A minor; Stravinski, ballet suite "The Fire Bird".

Miss Chieko Hara, one of the leading young female pianists in this country, will be the soloist.

Following his several years of traveling in Europe and America as a student attached to the famed cellist Emanuel Feuermann who visited Japan several years ago on a successful concert tour, Shoji Asabuki will offer his first cello recital at the Sangyo Kaikan, 7:30 p.m. Tuesday, October 21, with Yoshio Hayashi at the piano.

Among the larger numbers on the program are listed a Sonata by Eccles, and two Sonata for Cello, unaccompanied, by Bach. One of the Bach sonatas, styled as "Grand Sonata," is announced as a "first performance in the world."

Other selections include Grand Duo for cello and piano, by Goltermann; The Swan, by Saint-Saens; Angel's Air, by Hure; Spinning Song, by Boehm (arranged by Asabuki); Menuet, by Beethoven (arranged by Casals); Gavotte, by Lully (arranged by Piatigorski), Tornadilla, by Laserna (arranged by Asabuki), and Grand Tarantella, by Squire (arranged by Feuermann).

The Tokyo Music Appreciation Society will present Haruhiko Okami, violinist, in a recital at the Nihon Seinenkan, Tuesday, October 21, 7 p.m. Assisted at the piano by Miss Yoshiko Okami, he will play Beethoven's Sonata for Violin and Piano, Opus 30, in G major: Mendelssohn's violin Concerto, Opus 64, in E minor; Spanish Dance, by Granados-Kreisler; the slow movement from Goldmark's Violin Concerto; Guitarre, by Moszkovski-Sarasate, and Introduction at Rondo Capprieciioso, by Saint-Saens.

Mr. Okami, an assistant instructor of the Tokyo Academy of Music from which he was graduated 10 years ago, studied chiefly under Professor Robert Pollak and Mrs. Koko Ando. He has also been active as a chamber music player and organized several years ago the Sylvan String quartet.

The first vocal recital by Miss Haruko Mori, soprano, which was to be given coming Monday, has been postponed on account of the air raid drills and will be held at the Meiji Seimei Auditorium, 7 p.m. Monday, October 27. The singer will be heard in selections by Mozart, Schubert, Chausson, Lerroux, Delibes, and Meyerbeer. Miss Meishin Kin, soprano, and Miss Yoko Matsukuma, pianist, will assist in the program with solo performances.

Only six different monthly musical magazines, instead of 14, will be published from November 1, under an arrangement which has been worked out between the organization of Japanese musical magazine publishers and the Board of Information. The new magazines, which will be created through the amalgamation of those published heretofore, are to be edited in close co-operation of their new editorial staffs with the recently organized Japan Music Culture Society and the Board of Information.

The six new magazines include "Ongaku Koron" (Musical Criticism), a general musical review concentrating on musical research and criticism; "Ongaku no Tomo" (Musical Companion), a general musical magazine to spread knowledge and appreciation of music; "Record Culture", a review of musical phonograph disks; "Wind Music," an organ for brass bands and welfare music movements; "People and Music," a review for folk songs, harmonica, light music and amateur groups, and "Music Culture Times," a general musical news and information bulletin.

In commemoration of the 150th death anniversary of the composer Wolfgang Amadeaus Mozart, a special Mozart number has been published by the "Ongaku Hyoron" (musical Criticism), for its October issue, which just appeared as its last copy to be issued before its amalgamation with other magazines.

Among the special articles contained in the Mozart Commemoration Issue are the following: Mozart, by Wilhelm Diltey; Mozart—His Personality and His Art, by Ryu Takano; Mozart's Place in the History of Symphonic Music, by Kakutan Morimoto; Mozart, as Seen Through His Symphonies, by Kiyotake Seki; Mozart's Operas, by Kohei Kubota; Mozart's Chamber Music, by Yoritoyo Inoue; Mozart's Violin Music, by Naohiro Fukui; Mozart's Choral Works, by Shuichi Tsugawa; Tracing Mozart's Steps, by Keisei Sakka; Figaro's Wedding, by Takeo Ito; Mozart's Cello Music, by Takashi Kurata, and Mozart And The Conductors, by Yoshitaka Sakamoto.

Appended to the publication is the first part of a list of Mozart's compositions, compiled by Kiyotake Seki and Masami Warashina, classified according to different categories of musical works. Each category is listed in the chronological order, with the corresponding numbers of the Kocchel list of Mozart's works quoted for reference. In addition, all phonograph recordings of Mozart's works issued throughout the world up to the present time are indicated, and recordings already released in Japan are specially marked.

A Japanese translation of the libretto for Wagner's opera, "Rienzi—Der Letzte der Tribunen," in five acts, 16 scenes, has been published in the special September issue of "Ongaku Club" (Music Club), musical monthly. The translation is by Minoru Ogasawara, the author of the complete edition of Japanese music-dramatical works in Japanese. A pocket edition of the score of Beethoven's First Piano Concerto in C major is also appended to the issue.

Pan-American Policy

Announcement was made on September 1 of the conclusion of a new pact between the United States and Brazil. Although no details have been released, Brazil, it is understood, is to be granted credit facilities from $90 to $110 million under the lease-lend act. The present pact may be considered as an outcome of the negotiations that had been going on between the two countries since the Pan-American Foreign Ministers Conference at Havana in July, 1940. And it was in good part anticipated when there were rumors of an American credit of $100 million last August in connection with the visit to Rio de Janeiro of the president of the Export and Import Bank of America.

It is further gathered that the war materials to be supplied under the present pact will be turned to the construction of a new naval base on the northern coast of Brazil, extension of the navy yard at Rio de Janeiro and for some other military constructive purposes. In return for this credit America, it is said, is to secure exclusive rights of exploiting important mineral and rubber resources in Brazil. What is more important is the position that Brazil, in consequence of the present arrangement, takes regarding the Axis countries in common with Britain and Soviet Russia which enjoy material aid under the Lease-Lend Act.

On the heels of the present pact Washington is understood to have signed some similar arrangements with Mexico on the 9th, settling the long standing issue of oil on the one hand and promising economic aid on the other. The confiscated American oil interests are to be compensated by the Mexican Government with the sum of $90 million. In addition, $3 million is to be paid to the oil interests in indemnity for the lands taken by right of eminent domain. The Union States, for her part, is to continue the purchase of silver as in the past, to offer guarantees for the stabilization of the Mexican currency, and to accommodate $30 million for the construction of the Mexican portion of the Pan-American highway.

It is obvious that the Pan-American bases under construction or contemplation will be links in the chain of defense which the United States proposes to forge in her own interest. They are being extended as part of the United States defense policy against the Axis countries. Through its development and extension the United States means to strengthen her position in the potential war with the Axis countries. What is less obvious but nonetheless true is the position the United States will acquire with regard to Latin American countries through extension of her military influence. In the event of a military outbreak between the United States and the Axis countries, the Latin American countries would virtually have no alternative but to be dictated to from Washington. In other words, there is now a certainty of those countries aligning themselves on the American side against the Axis countries.

When Brazil and Mexico joined the United States orbit, the success of Washington's dollar diplomacy was beyond question. This success is rather remarkable seeing the influence of those elements which were against the United States in the last world war and are little better disposed in this war. It is quite doubtful if Washington's dollar diplomacy would have been so successful, but for the plight in which Latin American industries and economics find themselves in consequence of the European war.

Washington now is understood to be in negotiation with Haiti, Dominica, Paraguay, Peru, and Bolivia. That these parleys are well under way is indicated by information emanating from Washington. These countries, if their parleys come to agreements, are to develop themselves with American dollars as new units in the hemispheric defense plan of the United States. The objects of American defense investment will be the tin, copper, iron, and other mineral resources in which some of the South American countries abound. It is told, for instance, that the United States has already placed Peru's metallic mineral resources under three years' exclusive contract. The material resources thus placed under the control of American dollars will naturally be closed to the Axis countries.

The only reason for Latin America being dictated to by Washington is the need of economic aid and relief felt by it. In other words, the Latin American countries are pawning their future with the United States on its terms. The parlous feature of this new Latin American tendency is seen in the situation that is now thought almost certain to develop after the war. This situation will be an outcome of the grandiose expansion of the American industries that is being effected under the impact of the war. The huge scale production proposed to meet the need of the anti-Axis belligerents must result in serious over-production once the war comes to an end. The serious condition into which inflated American industries must of necessity be plunged in that event would have an inevitable effect on Latin American economies which have been veered from Europe to the northern continent. The countries which have surrendered to the United States exclusive rights of exploiting their natural resources would have no other outlet for their products. Their own industrial activity must be undermined and their systems of internal economy throttled. The danger of putting all the eggs in one basket is now being hazarded by those Latin American countries which are accepting the American dollars on the American terms.

Music Center in America

The Berkshire Music Center is a new name to the world of music. After only two seasons it is a famous one.

Already world-famed is its parent organization, the popular Berkshire Symphonic Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Salzburg of America, this festival has been called, and there is every reason to predict that the Center—a school of advanced music training—will equal the high repute of the Festival.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, famous conductor of the Orchestra, and Director of the Center, dreamed of such a project for years. He tried to establish it first in Moscow. That was in 1914. The World War brought it to a quick end. A second try at it in White Plains, New York, in 1929, was frustrated by the depression.

Now America has, in the quiet Berkshire hills of Massachusetts, a Center that seems destined not only to endure, but to bring a new fame to the New World.

Here the pick of the talent in the country is brought to flower under the greatest music masters of the day.

If the Center accomplishes the high aim of Dr. Koussevitzky to bring to the students "the truly spiritual essence of music, which stands high above the level of vulgar amusement and musical diversion," it cannot help but become an institution of world renown, a Center comparable in every way to the best traditions of Europe. —Christian Science Monitor.

New Radio Device

A new radio device which has the characteristics of an ethereal watchdog and can penetrate the barriers of solitude and silence to arouse whole families from their sleep, even when their radios are turned off, has been perfected in the laboratories of the Radio Corporation of America.

The device is known as an alert receiver, or radio alarm clock, and can be turned on or off by radio control from a central location. It makes no difference whether a radio in a home is on or off; the alert receiver works either way.

The device was developed as part of the war crisis and is intended to bring emergency warnings into thousands of homes at the same instant. Mr. Stone's statement pointed out that it would be "particularly timely now and in time of emergency to awaken or summon fire fighters or other civilian or military officials, such as air-raid wardens or police."

The statement suggested that the alert receiver could be used on any radio set. This, according to other information, needs to be qualified. As far as could be determined, the system works only when a special attachment has been connected with a regular radio receiver.—N.Y. Herald Tribune

STOCKY EX-CAPTAIN OF INFANTRY IS ROOSEVELT'S RIGHT HAND MAN

Steve Early Is Only Presidential Secretary in U.S. History; Washington's Authentic Public Figure

By DELBERT CLARK

N.Y. Times

More than eight years ago a stocky ex-captain of infantry with a good job, a family and a mortgage took a two-year leave and a cut in salary to help build up a new organization. The two-year leave lengthened to a permanent absence, and today Stephen Early, secretary to President Roosevelt, is almost as much of a fixture in the Administration as is the President himself.

Mr. Early is the only remaining member of the three-man secretarial that Mr. Roosevelt brought with him to the White House; he is the only one of a series of journalists who have occupied the same position to hold it for any considerable length of time, and he is the only Presidential secretary in American history to be regularly quoted in his own right in the newspapers. To the press correspondents in the national capital, and to a lesser degree to the American people, he has become an authentic public figure—almost an assistant to the President.

When Franklin D. Roosevelt was elected by an overwhelming vote in 1932 he was confronted with the debacle of the Hoover administration, a debacle which could not have been prevented, but might have been mitigated somewhat, by an efficient press relations organization. For months the President had not held a conference with the correspondents; for months there had been virtually no effective contact between the executive branch and the public through the only organized medium—the newspapers.

A. P. Correspondent

It was an intolerable condition in a nation whose governors depend for their survival upon public opinion; and the President-elect had determined that it should be remedied as soon as he took office. Back in the Wilson administration, when he was Assistant Secretary of the Navy, he had become acquainted with a young correspondent for The Associated Press. The acquaintance had ripened into friendship, and the friendship had been constantly renewed for a score of years.

Mr. Roosevelt had asked Steve Early to help in his campaign, but urgent personal considerations had intervened. Now he wrote that he wanted his old friend to come to Washington (as his secretary and reorganize governmental press relations.

"It was like a bugle call," said Mr. Early. "I couldn't afford it, but it never occurred to me to refuse. I asked only that the job have a two-year limit. 'By the end of two years you will know whether you want to fire me,' I said to the President and by the end of two years I would like to get back into business.' The President said that would be fine, and I came."

Louis Howe was then first secretary to the President, and for the two assistants Mr. Roosevelt elected Mr. Early and Marvin McIntyre. Mr. Howe had been his shadow for many years; Mr. McIntyre had been publicity director of the Navy from 1917 to 1921 and had publicized the Vice Presidential campaign in 1920 and the Presidential campaign in 1932. Mr. Howe died in 1937 and Mr. McIntyre and Early were appointed full secretaries with equal rank. Then Mr. McIntyre fell ill and for two years has been on leave.

Personal, Confidential Job

Mr. Howe's job was personal and confidential; Mr. McIntyre was the "appointment secretary" who handled all callers on the President; Mr. Early's task was to do what others had never been able to do organize and maintain an efficient White House press relations system.

He and the new President were in complete agreement on the necessity for friendly relations with the correspondents and the prompt dissemination of all the news that could be given out. They believed that no political administration could hope to succeed in a free country if it kept the voters in the dark; they realized the positive value of news disseminated by its author rather than by a potentially hostile source. So Mr. Early took up the task of salvaging what was left of the Hoover publicity machine and building a new one to suit the New Deal.

He himself was Press Agent No. 1 publicity man for the top agency in the executive branch, but he went over the record of each press officer in each department and independent office, studied the methods in use and drew up a plan of revision. He kept some of the old men in their jobs but generally started fresh. From the ranks of the working press he drew men with energy and imagination to fill the vacancies, and other men to publicize the many new activities in which the New Deal was about to engage. He gave them general orders: "Do your job as if you were working for a newspaper."

Spectacular Results

The New Deal's program was revolutionary and highly controversial, and a "smiling campaign" was indicated. From the President on down, with two or three notable exceptions, Cabinet officers and heads of independent offices discussed with the press the affairs of State with a freedom and a frankness having no parallel here or elsewhere. The results were spectacular.

Much water had flowed over the dam since those first thundering days of the second Roosevelt. There have been many changes in top personnel; only three members of the original Cabinet remain; Mr. Howe and Mr. McIntyre are gone, James Roosevelt flashed into the secretariat and out again, but Steve Early is still on the job. He has become a New Deal landmark.

Lowell Mellett, Director of the Office of Government Reports, now exercises general authority over the press officers and their staffs, an authority delegated to him by the White House when Early's duties became too numerous and too arduous. But the President relies more and more heavily upon Mr. Early for effective liaison with the press and the radio, and much of the continuing success of the White House press relations system must be directly attributed to him.

His intense loyalty to the President is one of his outstanding characteristics. Probably many times in the last eight years when the work became arduous, almost thankless, and more profitable fields beckoned, loyalty has kept him from resigning. It keeps him close to the telephone night after night to answer inquiries. It impels him to almost any lengths to protect the President when a blunder has been made.

Job Is Life

He prides himself upon being always on the job. Mr. Early's job is his life. Like most men of his age, he likes an evening of cards, plays golf when he can get away from his desk in the day time, and is something of an expert at "picking the ponies." But so far as any one knows he has no absorbing hobbies unless his taxing job can be called a hobby.

Each morning in the week this assistant to the President arrives at the White House before the newspaper men goes over the day's business and awaits his summons from the President, who takes his breakfast and morning mail in bed. Usually the summons comes by 10 and at 10:30, armed with the program for the day and having whatever information Mr. Roosevelt has to give the press informally, he meets the regular White House "inner circle" of correspondents for his own morning conference. If his call from the President is late, then so is Mr. Early's press conference.

He sits behind his big desk, cluttered, like Mr. Roosevelt's own, with a variety of trinkets, and the correspondents, 20 or so of them, depending on how much news is in prospect, stand around in an informal group. They take notes and ask questions while Mr. Early goes over the residents program for the day. If an executive order has been signed he accompanies the announcement with the distribution of copies and usually with an explanation. If any bills have been signed he passes out a list of them. The give and take is easy and informal, with first names normally employed, but occasionally sharp words will be used when Mr. Early resents a line of questioning or a correspondent believes he has been treated unfairly. After the conference, of which a stenographic transcript has been made, any changes in the program are dictated to a secretary and handed out to the newspaper men in their press room across the corridor of the Executive offices.

Advises in Advance

If it is a Presidential press conference day, Mr. Early brings the President abreast of developments and advises him in advance on the probable line of questioning. Regular White House correspondents have observed that when Mr. Early is away on leave the President usually has far less to say than when his secretary is on the job. During the conference itself he sits beside Mr. Roosevelt, identifying questioners who are not immediately recognized, helping out occasionally when requested on a matter of detail, and receiving any instructions that may be given him as the result of a question.

"Steve, will you look after that," is a routine remark of the President's following an acceptable suggestion from a correspondent, and it is considered settled.

Mr. Early is the funnel through which virtually everything in the way of White House business—except Presidential appointments—daily flows, and he keeps informed of the appointments and knows what they are about, for the most part. He is to a considerable extent the President's eyes and ears. He makes it a point to keep in close contact with key members of Congress and Executive Branch official. It is clear that the President trusts him, relies heavily upon his judgment, and, what is more, values him as a steadfast friend.

Probably because of his quick temper, in conjunction with his unflagging loyalty to his chief, Mr. Early has on many occasions made use of phraseology which has deeply wounded the sensibilities of those against whom it was directed. A man of quick and positive responses—he has the reputation of being irritable—he has frequently denounced the writer of a dispatch in terms which not only denied the story but also cast reflections upon the motives or integrity of its author.

True Friend of Press

Yet those who know him best consider him to be the true friend and partisan of the press and particularly of the Washington correspondents. They know that he has often come to their aid or pleaded their case before the President, and they feel that much of the continued openness of the White House to the correspondents is due to Mr. Early's presence there.

Mr. Early makes it a point whenever possible to know what is going on—though he has been uninformed, apparently, on a few spectacular occasions—and if he is under compulsion not to reveal the facts, at least he is not normally a transmission belt for misinformation or a mere mouthpiece who cannot answer because he doesn't know. He is, in fact, not at all like George Seward, the man the British Government installed at No. 10 Downing Street as press officer, who asked his superiors at the outset to keep him uniformed so that he would not get into trouble.

The secretary hopes that the outbreak of a shooting war for the United States will not materially alter the present system of press relations and will not cause the President to discontinue his regular open conferences, as Woodrow Wilson did.

"So far as I can have anything to say about it there will be no central handout office, no Creel bureau," he says. "I hate the word 'handout' and I have never yet given out a prepared story from the office. As for the President's conferences, I think he ought to continue them. Obviously he won't be able to answer as many questions, but in a war these regular meetings with the newspaper men would be the best way I know of to keep the people informed by the man they elected to manage the thing for them."

British Propaganda in U.S.

D.N.B.

The British Government has recently opened a propaganda agency in Chicago which is directed by a certain Mr. Hutton. With the American authorities this office has been registered as a branch of the New York institution of the same kind, which has existed for a long time already. According to an announcement of Mr. Hutton, the new office is to serve a twofold purpose. In the first place British war news are to be spread in a form that is especially adapted to the middle West. In the second place public opinion in the Middle West is to be closely watched and regular reports will be furnished on this subject. The British agency has been created as a center of agitation and espionage.

Various conclusions can be drawn from the fact that it was thought necessary to open such an office in Chicago. The British Consulate General in Chicago was apparently no longer able to cope with the tasks of British war propaganda, economic and commercial espionage. On the other hand the directors of Britain's propaganda in the U.S. had to acknowledge that the attitude of the Middle West is different from that of cosmopolitan New York and of the East Coast in general, and that it demands special efforts on the part of the British to win it over to their side.

This is not surprising. The influence of the Jews in the Middle West, the scene of the hardest agricultural and industrial labor in North America, is considerably smaller than in New York. The masses think more realistically their intelligence is wide awake. These circumstances are not favorable to President Roosevelt's policy. The American of the Middle West, contrary to the gullible New Yorker, is not at all convinced that participation in the European war would be in the interest of the United States. The British propaganda agency is now trying to make him change his mind Mr. Dies and other supervisors of un-American activities are closing their eyes.

CANADA CAPTURES LAWN BOWLS MEET

Born-in-Japan Quartet Loses In Finals at Bay City Club

The Canadian team defeated the Born-in-Japan quartet by 19 to 14 in the finals of the Yokohama Country and Athletic Club international lawn bowls tournament Saturday afternoon to stage one of the major upsets of the tourney. This match brought to a close one of the most successful bowling seasons at the port city club.

With all the four members of the winning team being in good form and three of the opposition playing below their usual high standard, the Canucks came from behind to gain the lead in the sixteenth end and held it until the finish.

Gorman Plays Well

G. W. Gorman played a very fine game, and his accurate shots as the Canadian No. 1 were a big factor in his team gaining the victory. Although he only took up the sport just recently, he more than held his own with the opposing No. 1.

H. Lefebre, the Canuck No. 2, also laid down some extremely good woods, especially at critical stages. On two occasions, when the opposition was lying two and three, with their woods only inches from the jack, he came through to break up the formations and enable his No. 3 and skip to draw. G. E. Beatty, at No. 3, played well, especially towards the end, while C. Heseltine, the skip, also displayed good form.

S. Stephens, the B-I-J skip, did not receive the usual strong support from his teammates. He made many fine shots and on a number of occasions he saved the situation, but he was faced with impossible positions at times.

The Canadians held a brief 2 to 1 lead after the second end, but the B-I-J squad was ahead after the next one, and remained out in front until the sixteenth. The losers' position was particularly favorable after the eleventh when they led by 1 to 6, but the winners reduced their deficit to one, 11 to 10, by the fourteenth.

Canucks Gain Lead

The Canucks scored a three on the sixteenth end to gain the lead at 13 to 12, and this surprising rally apparently unnerved the opposition temporarily for the winners gained a two end a three on the next two ends to make the count 18 to 12.

The B-J-Js fought back hard but their opponents defended grimly and held the losers to single points on the nineteenth and twentieth ends. Faced with a four-point deficit on the last end the B-I-Js lay only one when the skips came to bowl, and Stephens tried to carry the jack to his teammates' back woods as the only chance for victory. He almost did it, despite a number of blocks, but dislodged the dying wood three inches from the jack, to give the Canadians another point, which of course had no bearing on determining the winners.

Playing for Canada were G. W. Gorman, H. Lefebre, G. E. Beatty and C. Heseltine, while the B-I-J squad consisted of F. R. Harriss, F. J. da Silva, P. H. Lord and S. Stephens.

C. Heseltine, captain of the Canadian team, organized the first Canuck team thirteen years ago, and has tried annually to produce a winning quartet since then without success, until this year. He received the congratulations of many of his friends for his persistent efforts which have just been crowned with success. The word Canada will now be printed on the board bearing the names of other winners of the international event, which include America, Born-in-Japan, Continent, England, Ireland and Scotland.

Much of the success of the just concluded season is due to the lawn bowls committee, which includes W. A. Tomlinson, captain, E. Dentici and C. Heseltine. It has been announced that the annual lawn bowls dinner, at which the winners of the various events will receive their prizes, will be held in about a fortnight, soon after the air raid maneuvers are over.

The winners of the various events are as follows:

Men's Championship Singles
Winner: P. H. Lord.

Winners: Miss T. Planas and G. E. Beatty.
Runners-up: Mr. and Mrs. M. L. Russell.

International
Winner: Canadian team consisting of G. W. Gorman, H. Lefebre, G. E. Beatty and C. Heseltine (skip).

Brinon Lauds Dignified Stand of People During Hardship

PARIS, September 30.—Ambassador Count Fernand de Brinon, the representative of the French Government in the occupied territories, today lauded the dignified attitude taken by the people of Paris during the last three days, of last week when they were forbidden to appear on the streets after dark.

In a statement to United States journalists he described the British efforts to encourage people in France to commit assaults as "dishonorable."

Asa Bushnell Smith Appointed Director To Aid Pan-American Sports Activities

Asa Smith Bushnell, executive director of the Central Office for Eastern Intercollegiate Athletics, secretary of the E. I. F. A. I. C. A., E. I. S. L. I. C. F. A., E. I. B. L. and a dozen other alphabetically abbreviated Eastern college groups, has become director of the sports section for the coordinator of Inter-American Affairs, reports the New York Herald Tribune.

Nelson A. Rockefeller, the coordinator, announced Mr. Bushnell's appointment although Mr. Bushnell has been on the job for nearly a month. He will split his time between the new Pan-American assignment and the Central Office, for which he appoints officials and directs such events as the intercollegiates (track) and all manner of championship events.

The Rockefeller announcement said: "Mr. Bushnell will direct the interchange of athletic teams and exhibition players among the American nations and cooperate with sports leaders of this country and the other Americas in plans for the Pan-American games in Buenos Aires in 1942."

Actually, Mr. Bushnell will not take charge of the organization of the Pan-American games or the organization of the American affiliation as a member of the executive committee of the U. S. of A. Sports Federation.

"We will not presume to supersede the Amateur Athletic Union or the U. S. of A. Sports Federation in the conduct of the Pan-American games," said Bushnell. "We shall determine what part sport can play in helping Inter-American affairs, and our chief job is to expedite sports relations."

Inasmuch as the Office of the Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs is a government agency under the Office for Emergency Management, the sports section of this office represents the first official government invasion of the field of sports. Unlike some other countries (England is another exception), the United States has never subsidized sports, and there is no intent to subsidize sports in this connection.

"We are not promoting any sports," said Mr. Bushnell.

Mr. Bushnell will get a full-time assistant to aid him in running the central office, he said.

CANADA WAR EXPENDITURE REACHES $2,000,000,000

Amount Is Equivalent to 35 to 40 Per Cent of the Dominion's Income

United Press

OTTAWA, October 9.—With a total popopulation of less than 12,000,000, the Dominion of Canada had 12,500 permament personnel in the armed service when, one week after Britain and France declared war on Germany on September 10, 1939.

Today the hemisphere's northernmost nation has an active volunteer army of 220,000 plus a home defense reserve of more than 1,700,000, a navy of 20,000 and an air force of 55,000.

In terms of the population of the United States, Canadian forces are comparable with an armed strength on active service of something over the 3,000,000 mark. Dominion war expenditures this year, at 35 to 40 per cent of the national income, total more than $2,000,000,000, amounting to a comparable figure of $35,000,000,000 by the United States.

So far, all recruiting for the active services has been on a voluntary basis, in line with 1940 election promises of both the continuing Liberal administration and Conservative opposition.

The nearest thing to national service has been the calling up of unattached age groups from 21 to 24 in small groups. After a four-month training course, each group is posted to reserve units on home defense, freeing other active units for duty anywhere. However, entire battalions of home defense troops have volunteered en masse and been accepted into the regular army.

try that deserves the name of "aggressor."

Instruments of Aggression

These developments give rise to a grave doubt in our minds as to whether America is not a born aggressor and that the teachings which the missionaries have brought to the Orient are perhaps nothing but instruments of aggression. Great disappointment will await us if the reality of this is confirmed.

A secondary but important effect of a war with Japan will be in giving rise to racial war, the curse of humanity. In 1919 at the Paris Conference the Japanese delegation proposed that a clause recognizing the principle of "the equality of nations and the just treatment of their nationals" be inserted in the Covenant of the League of Nations. The Chinese delegates gave full support to this proposal, forgetting all the political problems which then divided China from Japan, including the Shantung question.

They instinctively knew that once a racial question arose, the two Oriental nations must unite, and that Japan's position as a great Power should be maintained in order to attain the goal of racial equality. America's war with Japan would necessarily awaken racial consciousness among all the non-white peoples, and the result of this would be more far-reaching than any kind of new order. It is well then that America should visualize fully and beforehand the important consequences which its actions will most probably bring about.

We have shown that the driving force of the so-called ABCD front against Japan is the United States. Britain and Holland are essentially European nations whose fate hinges upon the outcome of the European war. As for China, Japan will be able to find out a just and reasonable solution, whatever the cause of the trouble; the China affair is after all a domestic problem of the Orient, which must be solved within the Oriental family.

Differences Inevitable

Since the close of the first World War, a curious habit has been prevalent among leading nations of assuming the role of international policemen, looking upon others as criminals. As long as nations exist in the plural, differences of opinion are inevitable. It would be a great blessing to humanity, if God did reveal Himself and decide these differences once for all.

Until that time, however, we must be content to mind our own affairs and act to the best of our judgment, leaving others to do likewise. That is the only practical way to live in peace in a world of many nations. Once a nation attempts to judge for others, especially for those with which it is not familiar, it is assuming the role of God, which to us appears entirely blasphemous.

Japan is working at present to establish a co-prosperity sphere for its own region. It was not Japan's own choice, but it was forced upon it by the attitude taken by the Powers, especially America, toward Japan. So in the task Japan is perfectly convinced of its own righteousness, but here it must be added that it is not assuming infallibility at all. It cannot and will not assume anything of the kind, but neither can it admit infallibility for America nor that of the doctrine that "America can do no wrong."

We are not implying here that America has assumed the role of God, but only express our earnest hope that America will not act as is forbidden for all nations to act.

Whither A-B-C-D? To this question America is the competent authority to give the proper answer.

Michigan Bridge Collapses

United Press.

SAULT STE. MARIE, Michigan, October 8.—The railroad bridge across the Soo Canal connecting Lake Superior and Lake Huron collapsed yesterday under the weight of a freight train, drowning two men, tying up all traffic at the Michigan-Ontario border and dumping an engine and two box-cars into the Canal locks, thereby halting ore freighters in the east-west approaches to the canal. It was believed the collapse resulted from a faulty mechanism failing to lock the two sections of the bridge at the center.

STEEL CONSUMPTION FIGURES ANNOUNCED

3,725,000 Tons Required for Construction of 1,100 Cargo Ships in U.S.

Steel requirements for the hulls of more than 1,100 cargo ships to be constructed under the direction of the United States Maritime Commission will total more than 3,210,000 tons, Captain Edward Macauley, U.S.N., retired, member of the commission, disclosed recently at Port Hueneme, California, reports the New York Herald Tribune. Captain Macauley said that 515,000 tons of steel are required for ships now building, making the enormous total of 3,725,000 tons of steel for hulls.

In an address prepared for the dedication of the United States Maritime Service's new $750,000 training station for apprentice seamen, Captain Macauley listed the ships as 878 emergency cargo vessels, 60 freighters for the British Government, and 200 vessels under the commission's long-range shipbuilding program.

The new training station, the first of its kind to be opened on the Pacific Coast in the government's nation-wide program to provide seamen for the rapidly expanding merchant marine, is about 60 miles north of Los Angeles and 35 miles south of Santa Barbara. It has an enrollment capacity of 400 men and can be expanded if necessary.

Trainees Participate

Participating in the ceremonies were commission officials, representatives of the United States Navy and Coast Guard and 300 trainees who just arrived here from the Atlantic coast in the station's new training-ship American Sailor, one of the largest and most modern training vessels in the country.

In his prepared address Captain Macauley also stressed the importance of sea power and praised the Maritime Service's training program.

"There has been so much talk of late about air power versus sea power that many people have thoughtlessly assumed that the sea is not as important as it used to be," Captain Macauley said. "Without belittling the significance of air power, nothing could be farther from the truth is that the seas have never been so important as they are today. The future of civilization and the whole course of history for centuries to come depend at this moment upon the control of the sea by the navies of the United States and Great Britain.

"Much has been written about the 'influence of sea power on history,' but less has been said about the influence of seaborne commerce upon history. But the very factors that have made sea power so potent in deciding wars and thus shaping history have in a less dramatic way made seaborne commerce equally potent in shaping civilization in peace time, in influencing the policies of countries that make the wars."

Men and Vessels

After detailing the big shipbuilding program now being carried out in the United States to aid the democracies and to serve the nation's needs for vital commerce, Captain Macauley asserted that the vessels "are no more important than the men who are to man them."

"Our training service and facilities, of which this splendid plant is a part, are to assure that America shall grow in greatness and power on the sea, and that the young men who choose the sea as their careers may be properly equipped to do their part," he continued. "To choose the sea as your career is no ordinary choice. It is a noble and important calling that demands the very best we as a nation have to offer."

Telfair Knight, director of the division of training of the commission; Captain W. F. Towle, superintendent of the station; Commander W. N. Derby, United States Coast Guard, chief of the United States Marine Service, the training agency jointly administered by the commission and the Coast Guard; and Frank Colston, president of the Centura Chamber of Commerce, also spoke.

It was estimated that the Maritime Service, which has stations at New York, St. Petersburg Florida, and elsewhere, has built up an organization of 7,000 men in a relatively short time. In addition to the training stations, the service has a number of training ships.

CLUB RUGBY TEAM DEFEATS KOEIKAI

Y.C.A.C. Soccer Practice Game Held—Planas' Group Triumphant

The Yokohama Country and Athletic Club rugby team started its season on the right foot with a 22 to 0 victory over the Koeikai 15 Sunday afternoon at the Y.C. and A.C. grounds.

The home team was ahead by 6 to 0 at half-time, and as it was playing with two men short while the visitors had a full side, it looked like anybody's game at the interval. However, the winners stood the pace well despite it being their initial appearance, and drew away to win by a comfortable margin.

Play during the opening minutes centered about midfield, after which the home squad kept the visitors on the defensive but did not threaten seriously for the first quarter-hour.

Jalenques Gets Ball

After 17 minutes Jalenques got the ball near the center line and cut through to inside the opponents' 25 before he was tackled. As he was being brought down he passed across to Agajan, who went over midway between the sideline and the posts. Planas' convert attempt hit the upright and bounded back onto the field, leaving the score at 3 to 0.

The Koeikai fought hard to at least tie the count and nearly got a try a few minutes later, when Togawa's run was stopped a few yards from the line. However, the club forwards dribbled the ball out of danger.

Soon after the Y.C. and A.C. backfield got away to a nice run from just inside their territory, Jalenques being downed inside the visitors' twenty-five to end the movement. Almost immediately after the club threes got going again on a fine passing movement and Russell scored after cleverly sidestepping three defenders. The attempt for the extra two points barely missed one of the uprights.

No further scoring took place before the interval, leaving the score at 6 to 0.

When the visitors began to press after halftime, many thought the home team would wilt due to lack of condition as it was the latter's first game of the season, but the opposite proved to be the case, the Y.C. and A.C. showing improved form as the match progressed.

Pass Well Completed

Ten minutes after the resumption of play, Harriss got the ball near midfield and was well in the Koekai 25 before he was pulled down. His pass to Agajan was well accepted, this player making the remaining distance to the goal line. A difficult convert attempt was wide of the mark, and the scoreboard read 9 to 0.

The Y.C. and A.C. continued to press but the opposition held for some time. The visitors nearly broke through once, but Rodriguez, the full-back, got the ballcarrier to prevent an almost certain try.

A few minutes later Jalenques punted from midfield toward the opponents goal line, and a defender carried the ball over and touched it down, resulting in a five-yard scrum. The cub pack carried it over for a scrum try, which Planas converted, raising the total to 14.

Five minutes later Jalenques again kicked, and followed up hard. The ball was dropped by one of the Koeikai backs, and Jalenques scooped it up and placed it between the uprights. The try for the extra points was successful, making the score 19 to 0.

The visitors kept fighting hard to avoid a shutout, and nearly scored soon after. However, Pestalozzi punted clear to midfield, and then charged down the field and tackled the receiver, who dropped the ball. Russell, who had also followed up, booted the ball far ahead. He outran the opposing backs, gathered up the ball on the bounce and went over near the sideline. The convert failed, the count resting at 22 to 0. Neither side could score during the remaining few minutes.

A. A. F. Shearer was the referee and G. Edmondson was linesman.

Club Players Excellent

All the club players did well. Moysey and Weiss worked especially hard in the pack, while Harriss, the captain, did particularly well in the backfield. Togawa was outstanding for the visitors.

The lineups follow:

Y.C. and A.C.: F. Rodriguez; J. J. Planas, M. L. Russell, M. Jalenques; F. R. Harriss (captain), E. Salter; M. Pestalozzi, W. Salter, G. Agajan, A. H. Ballantyne, A. A. Weiss, M. Weidenmann and E. H. Moysey.

Koeikai: Kasahara; Nakayama, Togawa, Shoji, Ikari; Kogawa, Sugahara, Hayakawa; Kudo, Iida, Takahashi, Ohkawa, Senzua, Kawahara and Hayashi.

Soccer Also Played

The club soccer players turned out on Saturday afternoon for the first time this season, holding an intra-club practice match which resulted in Planas' team winning from Rodriguez' side by 5 to 4.

Rodriguez kicked off in beautiful weather, and his side pressed immediately. M. Fachtmann defended well and soon the play was at the other end, and Komor in goal stopped a "hot one" from the ruggerite, Moysey, at close quarters.

Within a few minutes Planas opened the scoring with a deft shot close in, giving Komor no chance to save.

Soon after, new talent for the club showed up well and a clever pass by Makepeace to Rodriguez saw the latter get a clever equalizer.

Planas and the speedy Blamey then put their side ahead, and although Makepeace had also scored a "beauty," Planas' side led by 4 to 2 at the interval.

When play was resumed, both sides showed up well, although they felt the pace in this initial game of the season.

Two more goals by Makepeace followed by one by Agajan again equalized this rather strenuous game, which was very interesting.

Before the end E. Eastlake scored with an oblique ground shot that was too much out of reach for the goalie to get, and this proved the winning point of a hard fought contest.

Captain A. G. Stevens refereed the game, while D. Stevens and J. Nakano were the linesmen.

The two teams were as follows:

"A": F. Rodriguez (captain), G. W. Makepeace, G. Agajan, H. Fernandes, S. G. Bielous, E. L. Gordes and G. Komor.

"B": J. J. Planas (captain), M. V. Fachtmann, W. Blamey, E. Eastlake, F. H. Moysey, C. Fernandes and A. A. Weiss.

Housewife in St. Louis Is Rabid Ball Fan; Bronx-Cheering for Cards Favorite Pastime

I.N.S.

ST. LOUIS, September 10.—If you happen to be in Sportsman's Park in St. Louis when the Cardinals are playing at home, you would see—and hear—one of the most rabid baseball fans in the nation.

You would see Mrs. Mary Ott, a St. Louis housewife, stand up and you would hear her scream with delight should the Cardinals be pummeling the opposing team.

Trying to disconcert the opposing pitcher with persistent, slow hand-clapping or yelling is a favorite pastime of many fans. Mrs. Ott tries to do this with her piercing scream which sounds something like this: "Yiiiiiii." This outburst can be heard throughout the park. Sometimes, when the game isn't exciting, the fans turn their attention to Mrs. Ott and get a double show—the game and Mrs. Ott.

Rattles Catcher

An amusing chapter in Mrs. Ott's career as a Cardinal fan is the time when the catcher of a visiting team missed connections with a foul, pop fly. Mrs. Ott arose from her seat, screamed, and waved at the catcher. The latter hesitated a moment, then smilingly doffed his cap toward Mrs. Ott. The crowd roared.

Mrs. Otts interest in the Cardinal cause goes very deep. The wife of Charles J. Ott, who some years ago was a catcher and outfielder for the Bloomington, Illinois, club of the Three Eye League, Mrs. Ott took time out one morning from caring for her two fox terrier dogs and fifty-two canary birds to grant an interview.

"On more than one occasion I've traveled to Chicago, Cincinnati and Pittsburgh to root for the Cardinals," Mrs. Ott said.

Had Players for Dinner

"I've been a Cardinal fan for nearly 20 years. I know personally most of the players in the major leagues today, some of whom have accepted invitations for dinner at my home."

Mrs. Ott believes the Cardinals will win the National League pennant, and she picks the New York Yankees to win the American League flag.

"If the Cardinals and Yankees play in the world series, and I believe they will," said Mrs. Ott, "the Cardinals will win. They may not win in four straight games, but they will win."

Frankie Frisch, former Cardinal player and now manager of the Pittsburgh Pirates is her favorite personality in baseball. Her favorite umpire is George Barr of the National League.

Picks All Star Team

Mrs. Ott even went as far as to select her all-time National League all-star team—eight of the nine players being Cardinals or former Cardinals. She selected:

Bill Terry, manager of the New York Giants, first base; Frisch, second base; Leo Durocher, former Cardinal and now manager of the Brooklyn Dodgers, shortstop; Sparky Adams, former Cardinal, third base; Joe Medwick, former Cardinal and now with Brooklyn, left-field; Terry Moore of the Cardinals, center field; Billy Southworth, manager of the Cardinals, right field; Bus Mancuso of the Cardinals, catcher, and Grover Cleveland Alexander, former Cardinal, pitcher.

With that, Mrs. Ott went back to look after her fox terriers and birds preparatory to going out to Sportsman's Park and rooting for the Cardinals.

SCOT RUGGERS LOSE INTERNATIONAL 2-0

English Team Drawn Mainly From Service Plays Well at Wembley

Reuters

LONDON, October 5.—The English team, drawn exclusively from the services, played a magnificent game in the International against Scotland, winning by 2-0 at Wembley yesterday. Only inspired goal-keeping by Dawson of the Glasgow Rangers prevented a bigger score.

Scotland made only occasional breakaways, one of which narrowly escaped being a goal, and was practically penned in its own half in the first half. England's wingers, Matthews of Stoke and Denis Compton of Arsenal, were the spearhead of the English advances, with lightening flashes down the wings, while Welsh of Charlton supplied excellent backing in the center, and the two inside forwards, Hagan of Sheffield United and Mannion of Middlesbrough, supplied deft touches and were always making openings.

Like One Man

The whole forward line worked like one man, and the Scots defenders had a gruelling time. Matthew's wizardry was an outstanding feature, and the ball seemed tied to his toe as he squirmed his way through the Scots' defense.

Scotland stuck manfully to its task, which sometimes seemed hopeless, and it was only in the closing minutes of the first half that the Scots forwards, who were slow against the quick-thinking England team, were seen to any advantage. Then Marks of Arsenal, the only new International in England's team, emerged from his baptism successfully with a grand save.

Welsh, following a brilliant run by Matthew, scored after 14 minutes, and Hagen added the second goal after 38 minutes.

Although the pace naturally slackened, the same story continued, with the Scots grimly striving to check the English onslaughts. The Scottish half-backs were fully occupied, and were unable to assist the forwards, who had to fend for themselves, and with little backing they naturally lacked cohesion. However, there were some brilliant if spasmodic individual efforts.

The British team provided perfect combination, and was considered equal in merit to any peace-time team. Their forwards were plied by the halves, and in the second-half continued their intricate pattern weaving, and the Scottish goal underwent some anxious moments. At the other end, when the Scots became dangerous, Marks, in goal for England, saved the situation, and with no score in this half England won by 2-0.

60,000 Cheer Premier

Sixty-thousand people cheered the Prime Minister, Winston Churchill, when he went into the arena to greet the players in the England-Scotland International at Wembley yesterday afternoon. Mr. Churchill shook hands with all the players. As he returned to his seat the Prime Minister made the "V for Victory" sign in answer to renewed cheering.

A number of other Cabinet Ministers were also present, including A. V. Alexander, First Lord of the Admiralty, Ernest Bevin, Minister for Labor, and Herbert Morrison, Home Secretary. Others present included the chiefs of staff of the three services, General Sir John R. Dill, Admiral Sir Dudley Pound and Air Chief Marshal Portal.

The scene contrasted strongly with the position in the early days of the war, and the police authorities permitted a crowd of 75,000, attendance nearly approaching this figure. The crowd was bright with varied colors, including all the services and civil defense uniforms, which created a kaleidoscopic effect.

The Pipers Band of the Scotch Guards played rousing national tunes, while the cheering crowds created an air of serenity, to produce a scene which might easily have been plucked from peace-time.

HEALTHIER BOOKS DUE FOR CHILDREN

Juveniles Section Established In Education Ministry to Promote Knowledge

With Etsuro Sakamoto of the Social Education Bureau of the Education Ministry now appointed head of the newly established section for juveniles, the activity of the Japan Association for Publications and Culture is rapidly being directed toward the promotion and control of magazines and books intended for National School pupils.

Some publications for juveniles, as reportedly judged by the Association, seem to be more interesting to adults than to juveniles. The most common practice of many publishers is to fix titles and sub-titles indicating that the books and magazines are for boys and girls attending such and such classes of certain years, as if implying that they were so designated officially.

This practice, the Association thinks, will only mislead the public. Such a detailed classification of reading matter should be abolished entirely, and, in its place, all literature should be graded into "higher," "middle" and "lower" courses. This will bring about a simplification of juvenile reading matter and also a remarkable economy in the consumption of print paper, the latter coming from the withdrawal of many varieties of magazines for juveniles.

Would Check Evil Influence

What was learned in this connection from Mr. Sakamoto, the chief of the newly established juvenile section of the Japan Association for Publications and Culture by Domei Monday is substantially as follows:

"Firstly, there are many cheap and roughly compiled picture books for children. Because they are largely outside the scope of the Japan Publications Distribution Association which is inseparably connected with our Association, they are still flooding many book stores only to exert an unfavorable influence on the juvenile population of Japan. As to the other books for children, a drastic cut in varieties will be introduced. Care will taken so that some good reading matters will be easy interpretations of scientific information. Special consideration will be given to the contents of the books for the higher grade children of National Schools.

"Admitting that tales and stories for juveniles are proving a fine factor for widening and elevating the scope of the juvenile world, they are at the same time not to be the carriers of too much liberalism. It is hoped that through these stories the reader will be able to acquire the firmest belief in the excellence of our national character and the inheritances of our great nation. This inevitably leads us to wish for more publications in this line with the subjects based on true historical facts. We also want more books giving information on various branches of science and the topographies of the countries making the component parts of Greater East Asia. As to the illustrations in these books, perhaps I may be allowed to say that most of them are of feeble touch of brushes Stout and vigorous touches are seldom seen in these pictures.

Writers Should Travel

"I am of the opinion that books for children should firstly be prepared by experts on various lines of learning and then modified by the National School teachers. I also wish to mention that the writers of many juvenile stories, although experts on how to develop and tell the stories, are very often strangers to what is going on in the outside world. They are advised to move out of their libraries time and again and visit factories or make visits to China or French Indo-China so as to become properly acquainted with the manners and ways of the inhabitants of these countries. Through such moves they will be able to produce works really suited for reading by youngsters, on whose shoulders rests the Japan of tomorrow.

"Lastly, there are questions relating to toys, films and phonograph records which should go hand in hand with books and periodicals for youngsters. They all make cultural assets inseparable from the daily lives of juveniles. However much bettered the nature of juvenile reading matter may be, not much can be expected in the way of elevation of children's mentalities when the other cultural assets are left ignored. Concerning films and similar amusements for youngsters, I sincerely hope that the recently established Association for Little Folk's Culture will contribute much."

GOOD CROWD SEES SOCCER IN BRITAIN

Gates of London Club Matches Average Nearly 5,000 People

Reuters

LONDON, October 5.—Despite the counter-attraction of Wembley's International, which drew a 60,000 crowd, the gates of the London Club matches yesterday were again excellent, averaging nearly 5,000, with Arsenal and Chelsea attracting the biggest with 8,000. Arsenal won 3-0. The Northern League had the best total, however, 10,000 people watching Sunderland overwhelm Leeds by 6-1. Carter performing the hat-trick, which he started with a penalty.

The only unbeaten league teams now are Lincoln City and Bradford, who both won comfortably, Knott getting four of Loncoln's total of six against Sheffield Wednesday, who lost 6-0. Brighton had the assistance of six Liverpool players, including the South African Bush in gaining a smart away victory.

Arsenal is leading the London League by a single point from West Ham, Portsmouth and Brentford, the last-named dropping points with a home defeat.

The Rangers continue to dominate both Scottish Leagues, but the team engaged in the southern competition which was so sensationally beaten a week ago, had a narrow escape when, visiting the Albion Rovers, a penalty converted by Thompson in the first-half giving them full points. The Ranger's other team only drew at home, where there were short rations of play as the game was delayed for an hour due to the late arrival of Aberdeen.

Third Lanark succeeded where the Rangers failed a week ago, a hat-trick from Jones being largely instrumental in their defeat of the Hibernians. Five men shared the scoring honors for St. Mirren, who, surprisingly, overwhelmed the Airdrieonians. Gore, who is a member of West Ham, is now assisting Saint Mirren, and was mainly responsible for the scoring, twice making way for some other goals.

MANY GRID UPSETS FEATURE WEEKEND

Texas A & M Establishes Itself As Season's Most Powerful Eleven

United Press

NEW YORK, October 11.—Rude Upsets by under-rated grid teams and smashing victories by the nation's pre-season favorites today marked the third week of the football season in which virtually every important team in the nation saw action.

Texas A & M pulled one out of the intersectional hat today, and uncorked a brilliant 49 to 7 victory over the New York University eleven to establish themselves as one of the high-power teams of the 1941 season. The boys from the plains were hot, and they ran through, around and over a bewildered Violet Club in what previously had been considered to be a close game.

In the biggest intersectional game in the midwest, Michigan pounced on an unhappy Pittsburgh Panthers, taking the easterners into camp by a 40 to 0 score to leave Ann Arbor fans delirious with joy. It was the second straight set-back for the Panthers at the hands of a Big Nine club as Purdue took a 6 to 0 decision last week.

Texas Christians Win

Texas Christian also upheld the honor of the boys from the southwest by trouncing Indiana, 20 to 14, in one of the feature intersectional tilts of the day.

The Gophers from Minnesota turned on the power in their opening Big Nine game and smashed Illinois into the turb with a 34 to 6 decision, thereby establishing themselves as one of the favorites for the mid-West crown.

The Northwestern Wildcats showed a similar brand of power and finesse for so early in the season, taking Wisconsin by the collar and wringing out a 41 to 14 decision.

In the Pacific Coast conference, the northern teams covered themselves with glory in games against the usual "Big Time" clubs from the south.

The Oregon State Beavers kept their conference slate clean by scoring a smashing 10 to 0 victory over the Stanford Indians, and for the first time in years the Beavers were riding the heap. They trounced Washington, 9 to 6, last week.

The University of Southern California, still smarting under the 33 to 0 beating handed them by Ohio State last week, took another one on the chin today when the Oregon Webfeet blasted out a 20 to 6 decision.

Th University of Washington Huskies beat their traditional cross-state rivals, Washington State College, by the convincing 23 to 13 tune.

Notre Dame Wins

In one of the most important intersectional games of the day, Notre Dame trounced Georgia Tech, 20 to 0, at Atlanta with the Ramblers displaying plenty of their usual tricks.

The two service clubs had a fairly easy time of it, with Navy taking a 41 to 2 decision from Lafayette, and Army beating its traditional rival, Virginia Military Institute, 27 to 20.

Film Distribution Is Being Discussed

no Ikka" (A Family of Love), one of the latest productions by the Tamagawa studio of Nikkatsu, won the Yamanaka prize, which was created by a group of the noted motion picture directors in commemoration of the fourth anniversary of the death of the late Sadao Yamanaka. The granting of the prize was held at the New Grand yesterday when Mr. Haruhara also was honored by the additional prize of ¥500 offered by the Motion Picture Magazine Publishing Company.

For speeding up the liquidation and amalgamation of cultural and educational picture producers, about 200 in number throughout the country, a merger acceleration council will be established jointly by the Government officials and dealers concerned in the near future. The council will consist of officials of the Board of Information, the Home and Education Ministries, and representatives of the leading companies which deal with cultural and educational films.

The Education Ministry recently has approved four pictures as culture features. They are "Yusen Rajio" (Yusen Radio) by Toa Hassei, "Gyojo Kujukuriga-Hama" (Kujukuriga-Hama, a Fishing Resort) by Nichidai, "Yoikodomo" (Good Children) by Shochiku, and "Gakusei Hokoku Nojo" (Students' Farmyard) by Bunka Kigyo.

The Toa Hassei talking picture producing company has started the filming of two culture features, namely, "Kisoji" (Kiso Highway) and "Hakoneyama" (the Hakone Mountains), both of which will mirror the natural beauties and enchanting scenery of Kiso and Hakone, two nationally famous resorts.

After five months, "Waga Ai no Ki" (the Diary of My Love), has been completed by the Tokyo Hassei Corporation under the direction of Shiro Toyoda with music by Shiro Fukai.

The final editing of "Kaigun Koku Butai" (the Naval Air Force), a picture depicting the valiant bombing of Chungking by the Japanese air force, has been commenced by the Geijutsu Eigasha.

Under the support of the military and civilians, the location in North China for a talking picture entitled "Sakura no Kuni" (The Land of Cherry) was completed by the Ofuna studio of the Shochiku Motion Picture Company. Minoru Shibuya, who directed the picture, and a group of the Ofuna stars, including Ken Uyehara and Hideko Takamine, returned to Tokyo recently.

The name of the Little Theater in the Nippon Gekijo building has been changed to the "Nichigeki Ongakudo." As soon as official permission is given, the theater will reopen and be used as the auditorium for presenting programs of light music and short pictures.

Akane Hisano, Sumire Shiroki, Yoshiko Utagawa, Midori Koyanagi and Yaeko Mizukawa have been assigned for five feminine leads in "Gonin no Kangofu" (Five Nurses), a screen version of a war story written by Tomotaka Tazaka. The picture will be produced by the Daito Motion Picture Company under the direction of Goro Hirose.

Season of Autumn Begun by Theaters

curtain raiser. It is highly entertaining from the standpoint of both dramatic effect and story. It advocates the promotion of friendship between Japan and China. The main theme is based on the miserable life of a Chinese girl who falls in love with a foreigner, and that of her younger brother who studied in Japan. Hanayagi and Yanagi collaborate as heroine and hero, respectively.

Next comes "Amazora" (A Rainy Sky), a one-act drama, one of the romantic works of Mantaro Kubota. It is the unlucky romance of Osuye, a pretty downtown girl, who falls in love with Kozo, a joiner. But her love ends without fruit as matrimonial negotiations have been arranged by her family while Kozo makes up his mind to depart for Osaka. It is a lovely story with the sentimentalism and characteristic flavor of the town people, particularly in the life of artisans.

Hanayagi and Yanagi again play the two sympathetic roles and distinguish themselves, with the rest of the company excellent in minor roles.

3 FOOTBALL GAMES SET OVER WEEKEND

Meiji-Nichidai, Keio-Hosei Tilts Friday; Waseda-Rikkyo Saturday

American Football Games
Friday—Meiji vs Nichidai 12:30 p.m.
Keio vs Hosei 2:30 p.m.
Saturday—Waseda vs St. Paul's 2:00 p.m.

Geared for high-powered action, six collegiate gridiron elevens will swing into action this weekend in three games of the Kanto Intercollegiate Football League at the Korakuen stadium, Friday and Saturday.

Meiji and Nichidai, will make their season debuts when they clash in the first game of a bargain double-header to be played Friday afternoon. This tilt will be followed by the Keio-Hosei game that should be crammed with thrills. The Meiji-Nichidai fracas starts at 12:30 p.m.

Rikkyo Meets Waseda

On Saturday, the St. Paul's eleven, the team which played admirably against the defending champs, Keio, will meet the powerful Waseda Maroons from 2 p.m.

On Friday the Meiji aggregation will take the field as the focus of a great deal of interests. A year ago Keio handed Meiji a shock from which they did not recover all season. In the previous years, Meiji teams had bowled over Keio elevens without overexerting themselves, but Keio vanquished Meiji, 6-0, and the Surugadai team went on from there to a rather indifferent campaign.

From pre-season reports, this year's Meiji team is crammed with freshmen talent. It boasts a squad three to four deep in every position and the cry of the Surugadai eleven is "Beat Keio and Regain the Championship."

In meeting Nichidai, Meiji should not encounter too much trouble. The baby of the League, Nichidai has but a single season of American football under their belts. Last fall this bunch of inexperienced gridster's took some heavy pounding from Waseda and Keio, but did well in late games to end up just ahead of the cellar champs, St. Paul's. Thus, Nichidai under coach Kasahara will present a fairly green outfit and will definitely enter the game, the under dogs.

While Meiji, definitely appears good on paper, they will also depend a great deal on untried men. However, Meiji's backfield is certain to have Wada at left-half, an experienced triple-threat halfback, who in the past several years has caused no end of worries with his accurate passing, kicking and running. Along with Wada, at quarterback is Fukunaga, the hard blocking speedster who directs his team smartly in the Notre Dame system.

Shimogaki, New Talent

Backing up Fukunaga at the signal-calling position is Shimogaki, one of the brightest of freshmen talent. In practices he has shown considerable zip and fire and should see much action Friday. The remainder of the backfield should see veterans Obana at the fullback position and Kawashima at the blocking half. With Terada, all-star center of several years standing, who has no superior, the Meiji line appears terrific. The tackles should be headed by Ikeda and Wakatake flanked by Koga and Nikaido at the guards. Ends Oda and Okamoto are better than fair.

Coach Kasahara of Nichidai can start with the following one year season backfield men. At quarter, Captain Umezawa, at the blocking half, Takemoto, Muramoto in the tailback position and Kin at fullback. The latter is one of the most gifted kicker in the league. Last fall Kin, with his talented right foot kicked the only field goal of the season. He is a rugged plunger who combines speed with power and is always a threat with the ball.

The forward wall of this team is expected to line-up at the kick-off as follows: Ends, Takemori and Tomoda, Tackles, Okawa and Kogai, guards Sugimoto and Tsutsumi. At the pivot position is the aggressive little Furutani, who all last season put up a whale of a defensive game.

The second game of the day between Keio and Hosei is expected to be closely fought. The defending champion appeared far from a championship eleven in their season opener against St. Paul's October 3. Their attack in that game sputtered considerably and the Mita eleven settled with a touchdown victory.

Hosei on the other hand showed considerable promise in their game with Waseda last Thursday. They especially looked smooth in their overhead game with Murata tossing with accuracy. Combined with the play of Kunimoto, the old workhouse full back, and pass snagger Sakumae, end, the Hosei team is a real threat to the Keio team.

Keio, of course, still has its whirlwind workers of old. The line with Yoshida and Tanifuchi at guard and tackle aided by Tomita and Tanaka at the wings can still be considered a great defensive outfit. The backfield is where the Mita gridster, face some problem. Outside of Captain Tazawa at full, the starting back remains a mystery. However, Ibaragi, a newcomer, who scored the clincher against St. Paul's is expected to start in the important left-half position. Matsuo at quarter and Nakano at half may complete the quartet.

The probable line-ups for the games follow:

Meiji		Nichidai

FULL PROGRAM SET FOR THIS WEEKEND

Y.C.A.C. Schedules Many Events for Three Days Including Soccer

With today and Saturday both being holidays and fair weather being likely for the long weekend, the Yokohama Country and Athletic Club is expected to be the center of attraction for foreign sports enthusiasts in the port city.

Most of the first round matches in the various events of the club's autumn tennis tournament will probably be played off during the three successive holidays, while winter sports followers will have a full program on Saturday and Sunday which includes soccer, rugby and hockey games.

Luncheon for Zinggeler

An event which will also draw many members on Sunday will be the mixed farewell luncheon for A. Zinggeler, the popular manager of the Y.C. and A.C. for the past six years, at 12:30 p.m. The function is open to all members and friends.

Two soccer games will be played on Saturday afternoon, with the initial contest being between the club's second eleven against the Yokohama Third Middle School Old Boys at 2 p.m. This will be followed by the match between the Y.C. and A.C. first team against the St. Joseph's College squad at 3:15 p.m.

The students have already played two games this season, against Yokohama middle schools, and won both, while the club players have only had one intra-club contest. The S. J. C. boys are expected to be out in full force to cheer their eleven, and plenty of organized yelling will no doubt be heard when the rooting squad gets into action.

Hockey will make its seasonal debut Sunday morning, with two games scheduled. The club ladies will take the field first, at 10 a.m., when they hold a practice contest. The men will take over at 11 a.m. for an intra-club match.

Prospects for a good hockey season and a strong first eleven are quite bright this year, with more than 30 male members have signified their intention to play. Much credit is due to Major K. S. Himatsinhji, whose enthusiastic efforts have resulted in many men from Tokyo having decided to play the game this winter.

On Sunday afternoon the Y.C. and A.C. rugby team, which won its opening contest last week by 22 to 0, will take on the Waseda Doboku fifteen at 3 p.m. The club squad, it is expected, will have stiffer opposition than it did last Sunday.

The club line-ups will probably be as follows:

PANZER GROUP TAKES MILLION PRISONERS

Record Is Made After Conclusion of Battle of Kiev

Transocean

BERLIN, October 7.—The Kleist Panzer group, which fought successfully in Poland, France and the Balkans as well as on the eastern front, has recorded in its diary the taking of 1,000,000 prisoners after the conclusion of the battle at Kiev, it was announced by authoritative German quarters.

The group took 400,000 prisoners in France 200,000 in Serbia and 400,000 on the eastern front.

These figures reflect the enormous feats both on the part of the individual and the group as well as on the part of the supply services.

The wide area in the east led to a considerable consumption of petrol and ammunition, which were always brought up from the rear in time for this Panzer group.

Likewise, the repair detachments which kept the units in order performed their task most efficiently. The same applies to the intelligence corps who laid thousands of kilometers of telephone cables.

Vienna Greets Germans

Transocean

VIENNA, October 7.—Two special trains carrying 315 German women and 120 children from Iran arrived here today. After their reception at the railroad station, they were driven to the Vienna Municipal Building where they were welcomed by the authorities. During their stay in Vienna they will be lodged in a best hotel.

Mopping-Up Against Troublesome Monkeys On Awaji Island, Hyogo Prefecture Begins

Hundreds of hunters, both professional and amateur accompanied by their dogs and assisted by villagers armed with clubs and other handy weapons started a mopping-up campaign against some 1,000 monkeys on Awaji Island, Hyogo Prefecture Wednesday when the ban to hunt monkeys on the island was released after an interval of 18 years.

The news that the Agriculture and Forestry Ministry will release the ban this year simultaneously with the opening of the shooting season has caused a great sensation among sportsmen in Japan, especially amateur hunters in Osaka, Kobe and Kyoto, who seldom see monkeys outside zoos.

They had come to the island with guns and dogs, a week before. While taking up residence in the homes of farmers in the villages of Kaminada and Shimonada, which are lighted by lamps at night even today, they were waiting for the arrival of the day when they can shoot at monkeys freely, some of which are claimed to be as big as a full-grown man when they stand up.

These monkeys live in the forests surrounding the two villages. Since the prohibition of killing them in 1924, they have been multiplying, and today these monkeys of the pure Japanese specimen number some 1,000. Besides them, there live in the forests deer and wild boars, which, together with monkeys, damage the crops in the farms on the island.

Well aware that farmers cannot do anything against them except shouting or throwing pebbles the monkeys have been very bold nowadays.

When the harvest season comes, these monkeys come out from the forests in a great army and steal fruits and vegetables, and play on the farms, uprooting rice plants, and tearing egg plants and cucumbers just for fun.

As the mischiefs played by the monkeys on the crops became untolerable this year, the farmers of Kaminada and Shimonada complained through the Hyogo Prefectural Authorities to the Agriculture and Forestry Ministry a few months ago. Realizing that it is more important to increase the produce of farms by chastising these haughty fellows once in a while, than to preserve them, the Ministry has decided to release the ban.

ST. JOSEPH'S BOYS TAKE SOCCER GAME

Will Play Against Y.C.A.C. Team at Club on Saturday Afternoon

The St. Joseph's College soccer team has made a promising start this season, winning both its encounters to date. In its first game the S.J.C. students defeated the Yokohama Third Middle School by 4 to 1, and in the second, downed the port city's Second Middle School by 4 to 3.

As soon as the weather permitted, more than 20 boys reported daily for soccer practice after school hours and on free afternoons. After less than two weeks of solid training, the Blue and White downed Sanchu. Nick Petroff, playing left inside, scored the first tally. M. Nazir, at center forward, added two more before the close of the 1st. half. In the second period, moving on rough terrain, the collegians managed another pointer through F. Planas, while giving Sanchu their lone marker.

Last Friday afternoon, on the school campus, the S.J.C. squad tussled with the Nichu eleven, nosing out a victory through hard pushing and sturdy defending, 4 to 3. Doing the scoring for the college were Nick Petroff and J. Kranz, each accounting for two.

In one of the team meetings, H. da Silva was appointed captain of the varsity. He plays Left Wing and kicks solidly. M. Grochowski, in his first year on the varsity, has been in the goal for the first two games of the season. F. Planas is co-captain and manager, a veteran of former years. He is playing his fourth year on the team, this year as center half.

Gomes and Tishkin hold full back berths: both have a good sense of combination play and cover up well. Gomes is fast; Tishkin is heavy and kicks the ball far up the field every time. At half back are A. Janson and S. Faurs. The two play well defensively and help plenty offensively. The latter is out at the present time because of an ankle injury received during practice.

L. Down and N. Petroff take care of the right inside and left inside positions, respectively. In spite of their lack of game experience, they play quite satisfactorily. J. Krantz, at center forward, is expected to be the scoring punch of the school eleven this season. Playing his first game last Friday, he tallied twice against Nichu. V. Martinella handles the right wing skillfully enough to be an essential cog in the scoring machine. Miyagawa also plays in the forward line, but is out because of injury.

Substitutes include M. Nazir, J. Shapiro, A. Sikos, S. Vistak, and H. Lipporte. Three of them have already rendered service in varsity games.

The team as a whole is still unpolished but possesses a latent power that should gradually reveal itself as the season progresses.

On Saturday at 3:15 p.m., the Blue and White will meet the Y.C. and A.C. at the club grounds. This game will be the opener for the club and probably the third engagement for the students. The spirited rooting squad, which is growing in number and volume, will support their team from the sidelines.

BULGARIA ACKNOWLEDGES DEBT TO GERMAN ARMY

Sobranje Chief Says Ties With Axis to Be Maintained

Transocean

SOFIA, October 6.—To the heroism of the German Army Bulgaria owes the realization of its national union and the accomplishment of its national aspirations, President Kalfoff of the Sobranje declared in a speech at Varna on Sunday.

He added that Bulgaria would not allow its relations with the Axis Powers to be disturbed by British machinations.

Furthermore, while Bulgaria had always attached importance to the maintenance of correct relations with the Soviet Government, this attitude had unfortunately not been reciprocated by Moscow.

The Bulgarian people had invariably been inspired by friendly feelings for the Russian people, but not with sympathy for Bolshevism, President Kalfoff continued.

In conclusion, he emphasized that Bulgaria continues to be on the best of terms with Turkey and Rumania.

CHAMPIONSHIP GAME IN BASEBALL TODAY

Waseda-St. Paul's Clash Starts 9:30 a.m. at Meiji Shrine Stadium

Games Today

Waseda vs St. Paul's, 9:30 a.m.
Keio vs Imperial, noon.
Meiji vs Hosei, 2:00 p.m.

The wind-up games of the Tokyo Big Six league will be played today at the Meiji Shrine stadium. In the championship game, Waseda and St. Paul's will clash at 9:30 a.m. Other tilts are Keio vs Imperial and Meiji vs Hosei.

The victor of the Waseda-St. Paul's game will be the champions of the fall season. These two nines moved to the threshold of the crown today when, in four games they recorded 3 victories against a single defeat.

St. Paul's has defeated Keio Imperial and Hosei, losing to Meiji. Waseda suffered their lone defeat to Keio, while mowing down Meiji, Hosei and Imperial.

Waseda is expected to bank on the right-hand flinging of Ace Ishiguro for victory today while St. Paul's will send Yoshimura to the mound. A great pitching duel between these two is expected.

Statistics gives St. Paul's an edge in offensive power. Three of their regulars are smacking the ball over the .300 mark with first basemen, Shimakata enjoying a healthy .429. Waseda on the other hand will enter the game without a single .300 batter.

Imperial is looked to pull no upset when it meets Keio in the second game today. With no wins, Imperial is expected to finish at the cellar.

Meiji and Hosei while out of the league race, are nevertheless expected to put up a stubborn battle. Hosei, the spring champs lost some tough games by close scores and a victory today will be no upset.

JOURNAL EXPLAINS GERMAN ECONOMY

Intellectual Transformation Caused by National Socialism Hard to Comprehend

Transocean

BERLIN, October 7.—Under the above heading, an article in the economic section of the Essener Nationalzeitung deals with the collaboration between state and economic leadership as follows:

Very often, outside of Germany's frontiers, the view is expressed that the planned economy in the German Reich would gradually stifle the enterprising initiative of individuals and would forcibly lead to state economy. How little this is true is proved among other things by the speech which the Reichs Minister of Economy, Funk, these days held before the Reichs Economic Chamber. He specially emphasized the recognition of private property, the continuance of private enterprise, private initiative and the responsibility of the economy itself, and at the same time most explicitly pointed out the private risk.

Understanding Difficult

For persons outside of the German people, it may be difficult to understand the intellectual transformation brought about by National Socialism, especially when these persons are still rooted in the laws of liberalism. To them economy is still a purpose in itself, which is quite entitled and in a position to exert influence on the state leadership. In Germany, this principle has been reversed, because economy has to submit to political leadership. No one looking at things in an unprejudiced manner can say that economy fared badly in this. On the contrary, the coordination of the entire economic processes under uniform leadership has already many times proved its efficiency. An excellent example for this is the action of providing work in 1933. Without the guidance of the state, it would have never been possible to provide work and bread again for the army of millions of unemployed. Another example from the past is the economic planning in the radio industry, which in 1935 was facing collapse and owes its continued existence solely to the National Socialist broadcast planning. In those days the people's radio receiver was created and sold by the million in the market.

These measures were taken at the beginning of the time when the principle of economic planning by the state came into the foreground. In the course of the following years the economic planning by the state was extended and improved, until in the war it could furnish proof for its necessity. It must be pointed out, however, that economic planning is by no means a war phenomenon but an essential part of National Socialist economic policy. There is no doubt that in the coming peace-time economy many a measure and many a decree will be rescinded again or altered. However, the guidance of economy by the state will continue to exist also in future. In this it is of decisive importance that the guiding force of the state remains always in closest touch with practical life, for only in this way can the economic direction be adapted from case to case and frictionlessly to the given requirements. If this is the case, it will always be evident that there is no gap between the state planned economy and private enterprise, but that on the contrary the secret of the successes achieved thus far lies only in cooperation.

The Marxist idea that capitalism was doing away with personal individualism formerly very often led to an underestimation of the work done by the enterprising industrialist or merchant. And yet, any person of discernment will have to admit that also in former years the most remarkable successes of German economy were due to the initiative and daring of German merchants and industrialists. The full conformity of enterprising efforts with the political aims was doubtlessly created only by National Socialism. The National Socialist state leadership after their coming into power pointed out their objects to the enterprising merchant or industrialist. However, the ways to achieve them they had to find themselves. It is a typical task of enterprise to "invent" the economic forms. It is a typical task for daring and enterprise to push the new synthetic raw materials and to open up new markets. To this must be added numerous questions of organization and, last but not least, the question of leading the personnel and of social welfare of the workers. These tasks can naturally be solved only by personages who are prepared to take over a good deal of responsibility and risk, for a merchant or industrialist without the readiness to risk something remains only a fictitious creature.

Accomplished Many Tasks

Now, very often the view is expressed that the state itself is accomplishing many tasks. To this must be said that the state can naturally look after the economy, if it is compelled to do so. Should conditions arise which make it necessary that the state take a hand, the decision lies with the political leadership whom it wants to entrust with the solution of arising necessities: the state or private economy. It is even the duty of the state to act there, where private economy fails. It is therefore in the first place in the hands of private economy itself not to let such a state of emergency arise. The future of the enterprise of German merchants and industrialists depends in the first place on the future of the German people and on their own efficiency. The German national economy at all times will need men who assist in safeguarding our vital necessities and assert them in the face of the destructive intentions of our enemies. These vital necessities in their fullest extent, however, can only be recognized and predicted by the political leadership. Therefore, an economy without state guidance is unthinkable for National Socialism, especially today when developments point already unmistakably toward economic planning for the whole of Europe.

The future will prove that economic planning by the state and the initiative of enterprising industrialists and merchants are the pillars on which not only German, but likewise the European economy will attain a state of highest flourish, because order and daring are joined in it.

POST-WAR PLANNING STARTED IN AMERICA

Resources Board Outlines Long-Range Program of Public Improvement

The National Resources Planning Board announced in a Washington dispatch to the New York Herald Tribune that 51 cities and 19 states had started long-range planning of public improvements as "part of a program to build a reserve of public works for post-defense use."

The announcement coincided with release, as a guide to state and local government officials, of a report on long-range programming of municipal public works submitted to the President last June.

The report cited the experience of some of the cities in which demonstration projects were completed under direcion of he board's public works committee working with public officials.

Demonstration projects were set up and new programming methods adopted, the board related, in Winchester, Massachusetts; Nashville, Tennessee; Kalamazoo, Michigan; Dallas, Texas; Fargo, North Dakota; Scramento, California and Spokane, Washington.

Through cooperation with the Federal Works Agency, the board is sponsoring the public work reserve and consultation and other assistance is available to states and municipalities.

Demonstration studies in 1940, undertaken in cooperation with the Pacific Northwest Regional Planning Commission, resulted in development of long-range public works programs by Idaho, Montana, Oregon and Washington. Programming was completed or "well under way," the board disclosed, in Nebraska and Nevada.

States that had begun programming included Michigan, Arizona, and Utah.

Among the fifty-one cities that had begun programming were Montclair; Detroit, Kalamazoo and Saginaw; Dayton, Cincinnati Cleveland; Bismarck, Fargo, Grand Forks, Minot and Valley City; Phoenix, Milwaukee; Houston, Dallas and Fort Worth; Kansas City; Spokane, Seattle, Tacoma, and Bellingham, and Sacramento, San Diego, Oakland, Stockton, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Long Beach.

Tallying in every quarter but the first, the Meiji eleven ran and passed their way to a decisive 32-0 victory over Nichidai Friday afternoon in a Kanto intercollegiate football game at the Korakuen stadium.

Meiji demonstrated from the very beginning that they had new fire and flash to them this season and although held scoreless in the first period rushed back with vengeance in the final three periods to ring up five touchdowns.

Meiji took over on Nichidai's 30 at the start of the second period. On the first play a reverse pass lateral brought the ball just inside Nichidai's 10. A shot at the line gained little but Obana cracked through the middle on a straight buck and was over for the first score. The conversion failed and Meiji lead 6-0.

Makes Extra Point

With Wada dancing back Nichidai's punts right down their throats, Meiji again took command from Nichidai's 40. Two first downs brought Meiji to Nichidai's 12. Wada and Fukunaga rammed their way to the 4. Here a penalty placed the ball on the 2 and Obana again burst over. This time Meiji was successful for the extra point and lead 13-0 at the half time.

The third period opened with Meiji adding two more touchdowns on a forward pass and an intercepted pass. Meiji moved from midfield on passes and line smashes by Obana, to the Nichidai's 20. Nichidai broke up a pass and two shots at the line but on a fourth down pass, Fukunaga connected with end Okamoto in the end zone and Meiji lead 19.0.

A fumble stopped another Meiji drive and Nichidai recovered on their own 35. From here Nichidai flashed with a first down to midfield. On the first play a Nichidai flat pass was intercepted by Kawashima who raced unmolested fifty-five yards for a touchdown. Meiji failed on the attempt for the extra point and the lead was increased to 25-0.

Wada, the Meiji safety man who all afternoon was running rings around Nichidai on return kick scored the final touchdown on a brilliant off tackle run late in the final quarter. A blocked kick gave Meiji the ball on Nichidai's 45. A pass ate up ten yards. Wada then picked his way for thirty-five yards and a touchdown on a shot off his right tackle. A pass Fukunaga to Wada added the extra point and Meiji's score piled up to 35.

Fails to Score

In the opening quarter Meiji was knocking at Nichidai goal four times but failed to produce a score. Three plays after Nichidai received the kick-off opening the fray, Meiji blocked Kin's kick to take the ball on Nichidai's 28. On the second play Meiji fumbled and Nichidai recovered on the 30.

Scoring chance No. 2 came right after as the Meiji forward wall crashed in to block another kick and it was Meiji's ball on Nichidai's 12. Three cracks at the line gained eight yards but the last attempt was stopped on the 3. Kin kicked out and Wada taking the ball on the run weaved his way back to Nichidai's 8.

Two passes, a crack at the center and a wide end sweep gained nothing and again Nichidai frustrated Meiji's attempt to produce a score. A Nichidai lateral was intercepted by Meiji end opportunity No. 4 faced the Meiji eleven but they very obligingly fumbled to present the ball to Nichidai as the period ended.

COAST TURF FANS AWAIT WHIRLAWAY

S. California Awed by Scheduled Arrival of 1941's Wonder Horse

I.N.S.

SANTA ANITA PARK, California, September 15.—When Whirlaway, 1941's runaway three-year-old champion, arrives for Santa Anita's winter season, he'll be greeted, turf experts agee, with mixed feelings by Southern California's rabid racing fans.

First, there'll be unbounded curiosity to see the horse which humbled the class of the field, with victories in the Kentucky Derby, the Preakness and the Belmont, to say nothing of the American Derby, the Travers, the Classic and the Dwyer stakes.

Secondly, there'll be some sentimental opposition to the star of the Calumet Farm stable.

Whirlaway will make his first visit to the coast within sight of Seabiscuit's all-time money winning record of $437,730, and coast fans are not anxious for any horse, particularly an eastern horse, to break that mark. The reason: Seabiscuit, now retired to be a papa, always was the sentimental favorite of west Coast turf fans.

No one knows just why. Maybe because he came from nowhere, had one tough break after another, and won out in the end. Maybe because his owner, Charles S. Howard, always talked of the 'Biscuit like he was a person. Or maybe just because be was a great race horse which liked to run and showed it.

Only one other horse ever has approached Seabiscuit in getting the sentional regard of coast fans—Old Malicious, the marathoner, who always had something in the stretch even when his bones were creaking.

If Whirlaway, as a four-year-old, shows he can pack the weight he'll be called upon to carry, he'll stand a chance to eclipse Seabiscuit's mark during the Santa Anita season. His earnings have mounted to $320,611, only $117,119 behind the record.

Seabiscuit set the mark by winning the $100,000 handicap in 1940 after having been nosed out in two previous starts in this classic.

Whirlaway not only will have a crack at this prize but at $105,000 in other purses, to say nothing of overnight purses ranging up to $5,000.

Largest of all, except the big handicap, is the San Juan Capistrano at a mile and a half for $500,000. Others are the San Marco, $25,000, and the San Gabriel, San Carlos and San Antonio handicaps, all with $10,000 added.

Whirlaway abviously is a colt which thrives on frequent races, and it might be possible, the way the events are spaced, for him to engage in all of them. Of course, training and other conditions will influence Owner Warren Wright and Ben Jones, his trainer, on the nominations.

Santa Anita gets under way December 31, and Whirlaway and some 40 other horses from Calument Farms are expected to arrive a week or so in advance.

It might be noted that Calument Farm is the leading money winner of the current season, with winnings close to $350,000.

Everyone is wondering whether that record is an indication of what rival stables may expect when racing starts again under the towering slopes of the Sierre Madres.

MARK SULLIVAN WRITES ON HARRIMAN'S MISSION

Sees Delegate With Bible In One Hand and Dollars In Other

Transocean

NEW YORK, October 8.—Mark Sullivan writes in the New York Herald-Tribune among other things that the capitalist Harriman, who is at present leading the United States delegation in Soviet Russia, was presenting himself to Stalin with the Bible in one hand and billions of dollars in the other, so to speak. Stalin would take the hint; soon he would be singing, "Onward Christian Soldiers."

If Stalin accepted the freedom of religion, he would be compelled belatedly to regret the death of thousands of priests and other spiritual leaders, who were murdered, executed or went into exile to Siberia. If Stalin would drop the former communist slogan that "Religion is Opium for the People," the new slogan should be that religion was a stimulant for the dictator, who found himself in trouble.

A New York group of the great Catholic association "Knights of Columbus" likewise sent a telegram to the Soviet Ambassador Umansky, in which it was declared that over 99 per cent of all priests in Russia had been arrested or done away with by some other means. Death or concentration camps had been the penalty for priests who had taught religion to youths under 18 years of age.

BASKETBALL IS SEEN BEST FOR SOLDIERS

Noted U.S. Sportsman Says Game Better Than Baseball For Training

I.N.S.

DENVER, September 15.—Charlie (Chuck) Hyatt, whose name is synonymous with basketball and who plays a pretty fair brand of golf, believes that baseball can rightly be called the national pastime—but not for soldiers.

From a national defense standpoint, basketball is the best ol' army game, said Hyatt, who was an all-American cager for many years and now coaches one of the strongest independent clubs in the country, the crack Phillips Oilers of Bartlesville, Oklahoma.

"Certainly baseball is a good game," he declared, "So is golf, or football.

"But they can't hold a candle to basketball insofar as putting a fellow into shape with a minimum of injuries and a minimum of facilities."

Charlie admits he might be a bit prejudiced since he has devoted better than half his life to the court game. He recognizes the fact he was one of the game's greatest stars.

But, nevertheless, he can back his statements with sound reasoning.

"I'd say that basketball from practically all standpoints is the best game for men called into the army. It's better game than football for putting young fellows in shape with a minimum of injuries.

"Besides, it costs less per man to play than football or baseball and because of the smaller playing space required, the average army camp can have a lot more teams.

"A young fellow drafted in the army who has never competed in athletics could learn to play a fairly good game of basketball faster than either football or baseball. It also calls for speed, quick thinking and alertness—everything the modern soldier needs."

Hyatt recently turned to golfing and has cut quite a figure in Oklahoma tournaments as well as afield. He competed in the Broadmoor invitation meet at Colorado Springs and is the closest counterpart that can presently be found to the rise of Ellsworth Vines, ex-tennis champ, in the golfing world.

Hyatt wants to warn the Twentieth Century-Fox team of Hollywood, national A. A. U. champs, that the Oilers are going to recapture the title they lost at the tournament in Denver last March.

The Phillips squad is adding Hank Luisetti, the ex-Standford flash who made all-America last year in the Denver meet; Paul Lindeman of Washington State; Johnny Adams an John Freeberger of the vaunted Arkansas team of last year; Howard Engelman, Big Six scoring champion at Kansas last season, and Jimmy McNatt of Oklahoma University.

Before retiring to coach the Oilers to the national title in 1940, Hyatt was an A. A. U. all-American for several years with west coast teams. Before that he was a star at Pittsburgh. His home town is Uniontown, Pensylvania.

day, where all world religions would be able to display more and more their best religious and ethical strength. He believes that all religions of highly cultivated nations would find a way parallel to that of Christianity, while their own great ideas remain as a kind of Old Testament. Such a solution and interpretation would contribute, the writer says, to the general prosperity of all leading nations.

Surprising are the similarities and results of the third part of the book dealing with the problem of religious disposition. This is the important and undeniable fact of the religious crisis by which official religions are said to be losing their holds. As the author shows, many theologians opine to remove this crisis, if they explain the notion of religion in a new way. But even the most subtle definition would never be in a position to efface the critical status of things. Thus, he has to inquire the historic development of belief and disbelief from the Greek antiquity until the very present time. The only way would be to find a true synthesis between religion and culture, but the Swedish scholar is wise enough to know that the contrast between religious and anti-religious men will prevail as long as a religion exists in the world...

Idea of Reconciliation

The book of Tor Andrae is written by the spirit of sympathy, love and understanding which the mankind seems to forget in the time of struggle and war. Thus, it is necessary to remind the world of this basic principle preached by the representatives of all great religions. Thinkers like Tor Andrae would be the best missionaries Europe can send to other nations. We are sure of the great importance the idea of reconciliation will gain after the present war. Tor Andrae reminds in many points of another great man of Scandinavia, i.e. Fridtjof Nansen. Like that scholar found a large echo in the hearts of all, he will surely have a heartful welcome and consent among all who hope for a new and better order of things.

We will not forget to stress, that the publication of this book which will be translated presumably into English, French and Italian, means a very courageous step done by the active publisher J. C. Hinrichs in Leipzig, who since many years has devoted a special endeavor of making more understandable the world religions and their inseparable belonging to one another. We recommend the book especially to the Japanese Buddhists with the hope that they will find a way of a Japanese edition!

PRIORITIES MENACE INDUSTRIES OF U.S.

Small Manufacturers Face Cut in Supplies, Higher Prices, Broker Asserts

The matter of priorities of material is one of the most important problems facing the American people at this time. Particularly small plants and factories, employing 500 and fewer people, are threatened with their very existence. Large manufacturing concerns have been able, to a great degree, to substitute the orders of private business with those of national defense, but the smaller manufacturers cannot do this. Therefore a crisis has arisen today for a large segment of American industry, says the New York Herald Tribune.

Undoubtedly the majority of realty owners feel that this is a matter of little concern to them, but in large cities such as New York and Chicago, where small manufacturing and industrial firms predominate, both owners and mortgagees must be acutely aware of the problems of their tenants, for it is upon the business health of a community and its tenants that the entire value structure of realty rests. Therefore slightly more than a casual inquiry into industrial priority is distinctly in order.

Those concerns either directly or indirectly using materials such as zinc, copper, iron, steel, tin or manganese, either in the manufacture, fabrication or assembling of products, face either an enormous cut or a complete cessation of delivery of these materials—if the products which they manufacture are not for or concerned with the defense program of the United States.

Drop Seen in Space

If but one business in ten is forced either to cut down on its output, or to give up a portion of its business, this will naturally mean a drop in the demand for loft space, offices, and through a possible increase in unemployment either vacancies or a lowering of residential rentals. Because of this, those whose interest lies within the field of real estate must study this priority question from the viewpoint "What is absolutely necessary in order to carry out the defense program in the light of world conditions?"

If present priority allocation of materials is necessary, we have all got to tighten our belts with the hope that the powers of totalitarianism can be quickly defeated, so that the American economy may resume its normal functioning and operation at the earliest possible moment.

If the present priority allocation is unnecessarily placing an undue hardship on not only manufacturers, but labor, and all other individuals as well, then of course there should and must be an easing of the restrictions to a point where all materials in excess of those required for war and defense purposes will be permitted to be allocated to private business.

There is no question but that the rearmament program must come first—but if its administration can be such as to preserve all American business, this should most certainly be done.

New Construction Restricted

Priorities are today beginning to restrict new construction, especially the multifamily type. This has already caused owners of vacant land in locations where new construction is possible under normal conditions to feel the impact of priorities on their land values. One prominent builder in New York City this last week stated that he was ready to purchase well located vacant land—but only for the discount of waiting five years, when he felt building materials would again be available in quantities.

Where priorities are not restricting new building, price increases are, and it is interesting to note that while rents are rising very slowly throughout the nation, yet building costs are rising at a far more rapid rate. This is not an unmixed blessing, for the owners of the older properties should—provided operating costs do not rise too rapidly—be able to operate their properties and procure at least the present return.

The market for garages and gas station sites has largely disappeared in recent weeks in the eastern states because of present and probable future gasoline restrictions. Undoubtedly property owners will be called upon to bear part of the loss of business in gas stations, in the form of temporarily reduced rentals. However, the new pipe line now being constructed from the Texas fields to the New York area should ease this situation before the next summer.

Edward R. Stettinius stated in Washington, "The strategic and critical materials situation is as tight as it can be"; and Dr. R. E. McConnell, speaking for the Priorities Division of the O. P. M., on conservation, added, "The next few weeks will bring a period of public confusion, because Government restrictions will come as a shock to the people."

Volume to Fix Space

Manufacturing and industrial tenants are going to lease, and renew their leases for space during the next year at least, on the basis of the volume of business which they anticipate doing. If priority restrictions seriously reduce the output of many firms, there will resultantly be a lessening in the demand for loft and manufacturing space.

Therefore the biggest job in the field of real estate, during the next few years, will be in the hands of managing agents. These men will be called upon for more expert advice than ever before in their careers, for with the pattern of the American economy changing at an extremely rapid rate, a great many adjustments will not only have to be made in so far as maintenance and renting methods are concerned but management policies will have to be revised and adjusted also, if losses are to be averted.

Gallup Poll Follows Roosevelt Policy, Asserts Berlin Paper

Transocean

NEW YORK, October 9.—American public interest in the European War is hardly more than mild, Professor Edward Reisner, of Columbia University, told the American First Committee here last night.

He added that a small group in the United States was seeking to bring the country into the war. As members of this group, the professor mentioned bishops, professors, financial and industrial leaders, newspaper publishers and writers.

However, this group controls the means of propaganda in the United States and are effectively using it to direct public opinion.

President Roosevelt is the ablest spokesman of this group, the professor concluded.

Poll Follows Roosevelt

Transocean

BERLIN, October 8.—The Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung featured a detailed article yesterday about the Gallup Institute of American Public Opinion and about the political trend followed by this institute. The article revealed that the institute beyond doubt closely adhered to Roosevelt's policy.

Circular questions put to the public often referred to problems which the President himself never dared to discuss publicly. Other questions merely served the purpose of repeatedly ascribing popularity to the President, which he actually did not enjoy. The paper writes inter alia:

"The contents and type of questions prove beyond doubt that the purpose of the institute is not to obtain a neutral viewpoint regarding various problems, but that the first object of the institute is to prove that Roosevelt was acting with the consent of the majority. For this reason the institute engages time and again in interim votes which go to show that the popularity of the President was steadily growing. Gallup himself had quite openly spoken of an 'educational influence on the public and Congress.' The value of such polls must thus be considered in the light of such conditions."

Unemployment in France

PARIS, October 7.—Unemployment in occupied France has greatly decreased during the past year. Now there are only about 120,000 unemployed workers in Paris and environs where there were 500,000 last year, Le Matin asserted this morning. For the rest of occupied France, there are 30,000 unemployed workers as compared with 160,000 last year, this newspaper added.

WASEDA DEFEATED BY Y.C.A.C. RUGGERS

Hockey Season at Club Starts —Practice Mixed Game Is Held

Playing a brand of rugby which proved too good for its opponents, the Yokohama Country and Athletic Club fifteen ran roughshod over the Waseda Doboku squad to score a 47 to 0 victory at the club grounds Sunday afternoon.

The Y.C. and A.C. gained a commanding 19 points lead in the first half and made another 28 in the second to compile their total. The winners scored 13 tries, four of which were converted.

The home team pressed from the start and five minutes after the opening whistle Agajan fell on the ball over the line after a forwards' rush. The goal attempt, from a hard angle, was missed. The Y.C. and A. C. front line kept up their fine work and soon after Agajan again made a try, cross-in the line following some good play. Planas sent the ball between the uprights to make the score 8 to 0.

Can't Pass 25-Yard Line

The visitors pressed for a while but could not get the ball much past their opponents' 25-yard stripe. Play soon reverted to midfield, and then Harriss gained possession from a set scrum. He dashed down the field for a good run, and on being tackled near the goal line he passed to Russell who crossed over near the corner flag. With the try for the extra two points failing, the count remained 13 to 0.

With the club forwards having a decided edge over their opponents, the Y.C. and A. C. backs soon had another chance to score. Harriss obtained the ball again, and this time he was not to be denied, charging over after a 20-yard run. The convert attempt just missed the uprights.

The next score was made just before the interval, the home pack taking the ball over, with Stark, Agajan and Pestalozzi prominent in the movement, and the last mentioned player making the try. The ensuing kick for goal was wide of the mark.

After the rest period of the Y.C. and A.C. resumed the offensive quickly, and Eastlake plunged over after a good three-quarters movement in five minutes, making the count 22 to 0. The convert failed. Soon after Harriss went over again, and with the kick being true this time the scoreboard registered 27 to 0.

The students fought hard and forced the pace at times, but were soon back on the defensive. Jalenques took a pass from Harriss about 15 yards out and dashed through for the next score, which was unconverted.

Soon after, W. Salter blocked a kick near the visitors' line and Agajan scooped it up and dived over for another three points. The kick which followed barely missed the mark.

Jalenques Makes Run

Jalenques then made a nice run from midfield, drew the defense and passed to Eastlake, who made the remaining 15 yards for another try. With the try for goal again failing, the total was 36.

A good passing movement, Pestalozzi to Harriss to Eastlake, accounted for another three points, and then the first named player made another try soon after. The latter was converted, making the count 44 to 0.

Just before the final whistle the home forwards again pressed, and the action ended with W. Salter plunging over near the corner flag. The game ended immediately after the placement attempt failed.

The Y.C. and A.C. forwards played a great game, and deserve much of the credit for the easy victory. They gave their backs many chances in the lineouts, set and loose scrums. The backs also did well, although some opportunities were lost due to bad passes on fumbling.

The opposition fought hard and never gave up, but found the home squad too strong. They threatened on several occasions, but effective tackling prevented their scoring.

P. H. Lord refereed the fast and open game.

The Y.C. and A.C. line-up follows:

J. J. Planas; E. Eastlake, M. Jalenques, F. Rodriguez, M. L. Russell; F. R. Harriss (captain), M. J. K. Stark; M. Pestalozzi, G. Agajan, A. H. Ballantyne, E. Salter, W. Salter, A. L. Spence, M. Weidenmann and A. A. Weiss.

Y.C.A.C. SOCCERITES WIN TWO GAMES

Both Events Contested in Heavy Rains Saturday at Club Grounds

The Yokohama Country and Athletic Club soccer teams (and their opponents) braved the heavy rain Saturday afternoon to win both matches they played, the club seconds beating the Yokohama Third Middle School Old Boys by 3 to 0 in the opener, and the Y.C. and A.C. first eleven downing St. Joseph's College by 7 to 3 in the nightcap. Both games were contested on the club grounds, which despite the heavy rain was in good condition.

In the initial contest the club seconds kicked off facing the wind and rain, and soon were on the attack. Clever work on the right wing by Petroff soon ended with a goal by Rau, who scored after five minutes of play.

Sanchu Picks Up

The Sanchu O.B. squad gradually improved and did a fair share of attacking, its 10 men displaying good football at times.

Shortly before the interval Miranda, a new player, netted, giving the Y.C. and A.C. a 2 to 0 lead at halftime.

After the intermission the visitors fought hard to at least even the count, but could not pierce the defense. Their plucky efforts nearly brought results several times but the club backs and custodian kept their charge intact. Although outweighed, the losers never stopped trying, and gave their opponents stiff opposition

The club got the only goal made in the second half. Rau again finding the mark.

Captain A. G. Stevens, who has done much to promote soccer in the port city, refereed the game.

The line-ups follow:

Y.C. and A.C.: E. Eymard; H. Schoene and G. Agajan, J. A. Dixon (captain) and C. Heseltine; S. Petroff. R. Rau, E. L. Gordes, M. B. de Miranda and M. Pestalozzi.

Sanchu O.B.: Jobamatsu; Hirai and Mogi; Morikata and Horiuchi; Uno, Matsuyama, Ryogi (captain), Sato and Matsuno.

Suffers First Loss

The St. Joseph's College eleven was beaten for the first time this season by the heavier and more experienced Y.C. and A.C. premier squad in the second game of the afternoon. The students had won their two other matches this fall, both against Yokohama middle school teams.

The visitors faced the wind and rain, and found difficulty in playing constructive football under these conditions. The home eleven made a good start, Rodriguez, the captain, opening the scoring after a few minutes.

The Y.C. and A.C. soccerites continued to dominate the play in this half and sent the ball into the cords twice more before the interval. J. Planas, the center, was responsible for both goals, and the club was ahead by 3 to 0 at halftime.

Although the S. J. C. boys did more attacking upon resumption of play, their opponents found the twine twice more to gain a 5 to 0 advantage. The first of this brace of points was made by Planas, which gave him his hat trick. The second was scored by Dixon, whose lobbing shot beat the student goalie.

The visitors rallied at this stage and their persistent efforts gave them two goals in succession. Kranz got the first and Nazir accounted for the second.

Planas' educated toe sent the sphere swishing into the net for the fourth time soon after, and this was followed by Agajan also finding the mark to have the scorebcard reading 7 to 2.

The students made their third goal shortly before the final whistle, N. Petroff sending the ball past the goalmouth.

H. Gerad, one of the S.J.C. teachers, was the arbiter.

The teams were as follows:

Y.C. and A.C.: F.R. Harriss; E. Eymard, H. Schoene; J. A. Dixon, M. L. Russell, M. B. de Miranda; W. H. Blamey, S. Petroff, J. J. Planas, F. Rodriguez (captain) and G. Agajan.

S.J.C.: A. Sikos; J. Gomes, A. Janson; K. Miyagawa, F. Planas, J. Lerner; Martinella, R. Nazir, J. Kranz, N. Petroff and R. da Silva (captain). Substitute for Nazir: L. Down.

Coach Kasahara's Nichidai eleven, a team with but a year's experience, whacked the old time gridsters from St. Paul's to the tune of 7-0 Monday afternoon in a Kanto inter-collegiate football game at the Korakuen stadium.

The red jerseyed Nichidai eleven turned on the power in the opening quarter and marched 40 yards to a touchdown with Kin, the slashing fullback taking it over from the 1-yard line. It was the second straight setback for the St. Paul club as Keio took a 7-0 decision 10 days ago.

Two Drives Stopped

Still smarting under the 32 to 0 beating handed to them by Meiji last week, the Nichidai eleven uncorked a smashing drive with the opening whistle. Two drives were stopped by St. Paul's inside their 30 but on the third exchange of kicks Nichidai took command. From St. Paul's 38, Kin, who replaced in at full, tore off a 32-yard off-tackle smash to be brought down from behind on the 8.

Umezawa jammed through his right guard for two. Kin lost a yard but came right back to pick up six yards. With fourth down and a yard to goal, Kin again hit over his right guard and this time hit paydirt for six points. Kin converted on a place kick and Nichidai led 7-0 just as the quarter ended.

In the second quarter, the St. Paul's eleven, although driving for three first downs was unable to piece together a sustained drive. With Kin's booming punts setting back the St. Paul team, Nichidai had the better of it on the exchange of kicks. However, neither team came within scoring distance.

A pass from Terai to Yoshida set up the St. Paul's club with a golden chance in the middle of the fourth period. The pass was followed by successive line smashes which moved St. Paul's to Nichidai's 8-yard line. Two smashes gained little, another pass Terai to Yoshida just missed connecting in the end zone. A final attempt to sweep around Nichidai's left end fizzled out and Nichidai took the ball on their 5.

Kick From Behind

Nichidai was forced to kick from behind their goal line. A short kick gave the ball to St. Paul's on Nichidai's 30. Quickly St. Paul's roared back and took a first down on the 20. After two shots at the line a St. Paul pass was intercepted on the 13 by Umezawa and the threat ended.

As the game ended, Nichidai with Kin finding opening off tackle drove to two first downs to mid-field.

In the third period neither elevens made much headway, but brilliant coverage on the part of Nichidai ends on Kin's towering punts steadily drove St. Paul's back toward their own goallin.

PORTUGAL STARTS WORK ON IMPORTANT AIRPORT

New Base Near Capital to Be Terminus for Europe Traffic

Transocean

LISBON, October 14.—Ground work on the new Portuguese civilian airport at Portella has nearly been completed. The new airfield is to become the terminal airport for European air-traffic lines, and a transfer station for trans-Atlantic air-traffic. It is therefore expected that this airfield will become very important in due time.

The airdrome is situated only five kilometers away from the periphery of the Portuguese capital and airfield of the Pan-American Airways. It has four runways of 1,200 meters in length and 260 meters in width. The center of the runways is cemented over a width of 60 meters, while strips of grass flank each side.

Work to complete this new airfield has been greatly speeded up in order to relieve the Portuguese military airport at Sintra, which at present is being used by German, Italian, Spanish and British commercial planes.

CANADA APPROACHES LIMIT OF MANPOWER

Dominion's War Problem Is How to Utilize Resources to Best Advantage

Canada is approaching close to the point where it will have mobilized all of its available manpower for war and industry. From now on the problem will be to use it to the best advantage according to a pre-arranged plan. Experts in the Government see the approaching need for an over-all manpower plan, and a system of labor priorities, says an Ottawa report to The Christian Science Monitor.

When France fell and Canada started desperately to produce anything and everything that might be useful in the defense of Britain, on a necessarily haphazard basis, there was no shortage of manpower in the country. Canada, for years, had not employed all its men. No one thought much then about the day when all workers would be employed and factories looking for men they could not get. But that day is now close.

Yet Canada does not know today precisely what the manpower situation is. Among Government departments the estimates are based on the national registration of last year and the numbers of men absorbed since then into the fighting services and war industries.

The national registration showed 1,694,670 men in Canada between the ages of 20 and 39 last August. This is the group from which the fighting services can recruit, though they will take men up to 45 if they are in superior physical condition. To this original pool of fighting men must be added 110,000 men who were in uniform when the registration was taken. On paper, Canada has thus had some 1,800,000 potential fighters. But from that must be subtracted approximately 600,000 who would be rejected on physical grounds.

This leaves 1,200,000, and from them must be taken 305,200 men now in the fighting services who represent, in terms of comparable population, an American fighting force of something over 3,000,000.

The original pool is thus reduced to 895,000. From them must be taken the workers in the fighting ages engaged in vital war industries. It is assumed that of the 340,000 men in these industries the bulk are in the fighting age group. This leaves 700,000 men, but there must be further deductions for foreign-born who would not be accepted in the fighting services, for men with large families, and for experts required in many trades and professions. Taking these deductions into consideration, experts reckon that Canada has around 500,000 men whom it could hope to take into its Army, Navy and Air Force.

The question which the Government must quickly decide is how these men are to be used. Should Canada build a large Army in the expectation of an invasion of Europe? Should it expand its Navy beyond the present ambitious plan? Should it attempt in the air a still larger program than the huge British Commonwealth Air Training plan? And finally, and perhaps most important, what about industry? Where is Canada to get the men to man all the war factories now being built?

Two important further steps are possible. Canada can augment its industrial employment of women. It can drastically reduce industries that produce luxury goods and thus free workers for war factories.

Neither of these things has been done on any large scale yet. Women have not been drafted into industry by any concerted efforts, and certainly the production of luxury goods still is proceeding at such a high level, that retail sales recently have been breaking records, despite the Government's attempt to deflate them by taxation and by voluntary savings.

The Canadian Army at present plans to use 90,000 men a year merely to re-enforce its present establishment in Britain and in this country. The Air Force needs 35,000, the Navy 7,000. This adds up to 132,000 men per year as long as the war lasts, without any enlargement of the existing program. And this takes no account of the needs in industry, which will want 200,000 more workers this year.

There is such a drive now for an increased military effort, both in the fighting services themselves and among the public, that the program no doubt will be increased and the demands on the pool of half a million potential fighters increased with it. It must never be forgotten either that these potential fighters are not idle now. They are engaged in various occupations, most of which are deemed vital to the country in ordinary times and some of which are vital now. If they enlisted they must be replaced either by women or by men taken from less vital industries.

FLAYS U.S. VIOLATION OF INTERNATIONAL LAW

Noted French Jurist Says Roosevelt Also Breaking Own Rules

Transocean

PARIS, October 14.—The well-known French teacher of international law, Le Fur, made a statement to a representative of the OFI-Agency in which he clearly proved the violation of international law by the United States.

From a standpoint of international law, so Le Fur declared among other things, it was not permissible that a neutral state like America, shipped war material to belligerent countries and was making use of the Panamanian flag for this purpose. However, Roosevelt was not only openly violating international law at the risk of involving his country in a war, which it did not want, but he was likewise circumventing the American laws.

The Neutrality Act prohibited the arming of merchant vessels and the calling at belligerent ports. For American ships, therefore, Portugal was at present the only European country where they still could call in accordance with this Act.

Moreover, so the French legal expert concluded, this flagrant violation of United States had been admitted by many Americans themselves.

BEST TILT OF YEAR IN FOOTBALL TODAY

Defending Champs, Keio, Tackles Powerful Eleven Of Meiji

The defending American football champions, Keio will clash with Meiji in a crucial game of the Kanto Intercollegiate Football League season today at the Korakuen stadium. The kick-off is at 3 p.m.

The Meiji eleven with a brand new coach, Hanaoka, former Meiji star has undergone a complete revamping. Already they are hailed as the strongest team Meiji ever placed on a gridiron in the last several seasons, mostly on the basis of the sizzling beating they gave Nichidai last Friday, when they won, 32 to 0.

The Keio machine, too, has been remodeled somewhat after their all winning campaign last fall. Gone from that team this year are Yoichi Sato, triple-threat fullback and Hitoyo Yamagata, the brilliant end.

This season Keio has sneaked a victory over St. Paul's 7 to 0 and crushed Hosei 26 to 6. Only one freshman, Ibaragi the hard driving left half has won a regular spot in the backfield.

Captain Tazawa at full with four years of bruising action will do all the passing. Matsuo at quarter and Miyoshi at the blocking post completes the backfield.

The sparkplug of the Meiji team is Jimmy Wada, the swivel-hipped half back who specializes in running back punts from his safety position. Wada also handles his triple-threat chores to the king's taste.

Undoubtedly Meiji can strike with devastating result via the air. Besides Wada, both Fukunaga at quarter and Kawashima blocking half pitch with accuracy.

Coach Hanaoka has fashioned this Meiji eleven with tricky pass plays and he has speedy ends who are down the field in a hurry. Without a fast charging line, the defending champion Keio may be in for a bad afternoon.

In the line, the veteran Keio forward wall which poured through Meiji last fall to bring about a 6 to 0 victory, will have a slight edge. In Terada, Meiji has the all-star center of several seasons but otherwise it is depending on freshmen talents.

The game appears to be a toss-up. Whichever way the fortune of the game goes, it will be a closely fought contest with sizzling action which may turn the tilt into the best battle of this season.

The probable line-up:

Keio	Meiji
L.E.—Tomita	Oda
L.T.—Tanifuchi	Ikeda
L.G.—Tsugami	Koga
C. —Tetsu Yoshida	Terada
R.G.—Teru Yoshida	Nikaido
R.T.—Tsujita	Wakatake
R.E.—Tanaka	Okamoto
Q.B.—Matsuo	Fukunaga
L.H.—Ibaragi	Wada
R.H.—Miyoshi	Kawashima
F.B. Tazawa	Obana

GENERAL SPORTS CENTER TO BE WEIGHED IN MEET

High Officials to Attend Conference to Effect Integration of Athletics

With a view to establishing a general athletic organization for the nation, a meeting will be held October 23 under the auspices of the Welfare Ministry at the Gakushi-Kaikan. Welfare Minister Chikahiko Koizumi and other interested authorities are expected to attend, according to the Asahi.

It is believed that the Welfare Minister will stress the fact that the Government would want the organization to be a private rather than an official body. The object of the new body will not be solely limited to sport activities but to national air raid drills, daily exercises and systematic calisthenics, and an integration in the diverse athletic groups in existence throughout Japan.

Among the officials attending will be Gunji Takei, head of the Population Section of the Welfare Ministry, Seiji Nakajima, chief of the third bureau of the Planning Board, Ryuzo Kawazura, head of the fifth bureau of the Information Board, Major-General Ryukichi Tanaka of the Military Affairs of the Army Ministry, Lieutenant-General Yoshihide Miki of the Medical Section of the same Ministry. Michimasa Ogasawara, head of the athletics section of the Education Ministry and many officials representing the Yokusan-kai and other organizations.

Japan Yesterday And Today

images one may call "Laughing Buddhas." The images of Buddha, be they of stone, bronze, wood or clay, are as a rule sad, melancholy or wrathful, some of them as serene as the Amida, others ferocious as Fudo or warlike as Bishamon; but the laughing Buddha, wide open mouth and twinkling roguish eyes, must certainly be said to be characteristic of only this merry isle of Japan. For that matter, the great Daibutsu of Kamakura (if you look at it carefully next time you see it), you will find, with all its exquisitely-chiselled face and his air of majestic calm born of his supreme wisdom, looks as if he were ready to break out into a smile. So charming the Daibutsu a wellknown poetess found that she dedicated a verse, regretting he is "good-looking though he is the august Buddha."

Marks 104th Birthday

I.N.S

YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio, September 28.—Esther Bailey, Aunt Esther to her friends, recently celebrated her 104th birthday but without throwing her customary gala party for her friends. She said she is entitled to take things easy and instead had a quiet celebration with just a few friends.

Service Through Strength

This is one of the many beautiful posters printed for the 12th National Athletic Meet of the Meiji Shrine which will be held from October 31 to November 3. The motto of the games is "Service to the Public Through Physical Strength" as is printed at the top of the poster.

CAVALRY IS PLAYING ITS WAR ROLE STILL

More Now Being Trained for American Army Than at Any Time in the Past

I.N.S.

WASHINGTON, September 20.—Americans were astounded when bands of Cossacks on horseback moved into action in the Russo-German War. Cavalry, some said, has no place in modern warfare.

Yet in the heart of America, on 52,000 rolling Kansas acres at Fort Riley, the United States Army is conducting a Cavalry School which this year is expected to produce more accomplished cavalrymen than at any time in the past.

"In an advance, the Cavalry is usually the first to engage the enemy," Army experts explain, holding him away from good terrain—driving him back from strong points—passing back to less mobile forces the information they need regarding terrain and disposition of enemy forces."

The training which 2,500 cavalrymen will receive this year at Foot Riley be different than that planned by General Phil Sheridan in 1884, when he proposed founding the School. Yet the fundamentals remain the same.

As the Army explains, "it is the rapid mobility of its fire-power which often gives the Cavalry a temporary superiority (often sufficient to turn the tide of battle) over a numerically stronger but less mobile opponent."

Notwithstanding the substitution in large part of armored cars for horses, Fort Riley men are still learning how to fight and move swiftly over all types of roads or no roads at all, through swamps and deserts, forests and mountain ranges.

Among outstanding military men who have served either as students or instructors at the Cavalry School are Lt. Col. Douglas MacArthur, now in command of the U.S. Army forces on the Philippine Islands; Lt. Gen. Ben Lear, Commander of the Second U.S. Army, and the late Maj. Gen. Adna R. Chaffee.

So important a place has the Cavalry been given in the new U.S. Army that the period of training at Fort Riley has been shortened to three months. After receiving basic military education at other reservations, selected men are being put through a period of intensive Cavalry training.

Thus, years after the Cavalary ceased to be the mainspring of military activity, it takes on new meaning for our nation's defense.

BRANDS REDS TRAITORS

Mexican Legislator Wants Certain Office Holder Ousted

Transocean

MEXICO CITY, October 7.—Sensational revelations concerning some member of the Mexican cabinet were foreshadowed yesterday when Senor Enrique Carrola Antuna, a member of the Chamber of Deputies, announced that "communists must be regarded as traitors" and said that he would demand the resignation of a certain state secretary.

This report was published by the newspaper Ultimas Noticias.

While the name of the official in question was not given, Mexican political quarters generally agreed that the Minister of Labor, Senor Ignacio Garcia was meant. He formerly served under President Lazaro Cardenas and has frequently been attacked by newspapers.

U.S. IS NOT TAKING BINOCULAR OFFERS

Secretary Knox Says There Is No Need as Was Case of World War I

I.N.S.

WASHINGTON, September 20.—Secretary of the Navy Knox says that the navy has not yet found it necessary—as in World War One—to accept offers from civilians of binoculars or similar navigating instruments for use during the emergency.

Colonel Knox explained that the navy solicited navigating instruments from civilians during the first World War, paying owners $1 for use of the equipment. Under the arrangement, the navy was given title to the instruments so that the owners had no recourse for claim in event of damage or loss. It was understood, however, that the instruments would be returned to the original owners after the war—if they still were available.

"Numerous offers have been received by the Navy Department to make similar donations or loans to the navy during this emergency, but so far it has not been found appropriate or necessary to accept these offers," Colonel Knox recently stated. "In each case, the individual making the offer has been thanked and advised that their offer will remain on file for acceptance, if and when it becomes necessary of call on this source of equipment."

Huge Navy Expenditures

Colonel Knox reported that the Navy Bureau of Supplies and Accounts spent nearly $2,200,000,000 during the fiscal year ended June 30. The total, he pointed out, was nearly four times the amount spent during the previous war period April 1917—June 1918, when purchases totaled $530,000,000.

He said that contracts totaling $31,980,122 were awarded for petroleum products under the lend-lease program up to July 31. In addition, he said, contracts amounting to $4,333,454 were in process of award. Requirements for purchases of fuel products as of July 31 totaled an estimated value of $4,420,000.

Colonel Knox also reported "the probable use of alternates for certain materials has become necessary in many instances" in the Navy. He gives as examples.

1. Paper, Colonel Knox said writing, typewriting, mimeograph and other papers in process of manufacture would have 10 per cent less the amount of chlorine used in bleaching, the result being 6 per cent less whiteness. He reported that the naval clothing depot at Brooklyn, is taking steps to establish new standard samples.

2. Paint cans will be made of terne plate rather than tin.

To Use Black Steel

3. The use of chromium-plated black steel in place of corosion resisting steel is being contemplated in obtaining meat platters and mess trays to conserve nickel.

4. Table ware for crews, previously made from corrosion resisting steel, will have the nickel content removed entirely and chromium content "somewhat reduced." Knox said it might become necessary to silverplate plain steel in manufacture of officers' silverplated ware.

5. A vulcanized fibre stock tag with metal eyelet and knotted string, but without a metal rim, will be used in place of tags in order to conserve zinc.

COLOR OF SARATOGA STILL IN EXISTENCE

Famous Spa Course Successfully Ends Season With Old-Time Dash

I.N.S.

NEW YORK, September 20.—The close of the Saratoga meeting rang down the curtain on one of the most successful racing sessions put on by the famous spa course in its 77 years of existence.

This furnishes a very enthusiastic theme for those who annually frequent the popular resort town at the foot of the Adirondack Mountains. Owners, trainers, jocks, grooms, stablehands, et al, and even the general public left Saratoga at the windup of its season convinced that it is amply fortified by tradition to weather any change in mode or conditions that come with the shifting times.

Saratoga was the belwether of the old open betting heydays, rich in the lore of the turf's high finance. Many a tale was told, and is still being told, of fabulous bets laid and paid, of lavish sums plunged and lost, of fortunes made and fortunes broken. All this provided Saratoga with a special aura all its own, combining it with its trading post atmosphere that attended the annual yearling sales.

All this was threatened with disruption by the onward march of the machine age, plus the fact that other communities, strategically located, were threatening to make serious inroads. And when the machine age came to Saratoga in the form of pari-mutuels, there were old-timers who could not help but speak words of abject gloom over the passing of the "good old days" and bemoan the future of the sport at the spa.

Saratoga, they said, would not be the same with the iron betting men replacing the colorful layers with their stands, their slates, their eagle eyes and their brusque barking of your bet. But the parimutuels came, enacted by law, and the hand-books went out. Saratoga, locale of flush hand-to-hand transaction, took it in stride and while last year, when the machines first came in, the track faltered somewhat and shook itself into adjustment of the new conditions, this year came through with a season punctuated by color and success rarely equalled even in its palmiest days before.

The legalization of pari-mutuel betting in New Jersey with its threat of severe and imminent competition, threw another damper on Saratoga's chances of maintaining its prominent position. This threat loomed large last year as reports found constant revival of the proposed building of Jersey tracks directly across the Hudson River from New York City.

While the latter possibility can not be definitely ruled out for the unpredictable future, it, nevertheless has failed to come into being as yet. And even if it does spring into existence, what can it offer in inducements to rival such attractions as the hallowed and historical contests that only Saratoga can supply.

U.S. Interpretation of 'Sea Freedom' Dubious

only as a means of warfare against Germany.

The purpose underlying the publication of the Fourteen Points had anyway been attained, namely to spread in Germany the hope for a peace in accordance with Germany's own proposal of November 9, 1916, and thus to break its will to war. This deception was not very difficult for Wilson. In 1916 he was re-elected President on the strength of his slogan that no road, which he would take, would lead the United States into war. In August, 1919 he admitted before Congress that he had hoped and believed from the beginning that the United States would enter the war, regardless of Germany's attitude and behavior.

Wilson had done a lot of preparatory work: When France in autumn 1914 was nearly inclined to make an offer of peace to Germany, the United States Ambassador in Paris accompanied by his predecessor as well as his successor called on the French Government imploring the latter not to terminate the war and promising at the same time that the United States would join in the war. "For the moment only about 50,000 influential Americans were ready to go to war, but soon there would be a hundred million." Thus the French Minister Hanotaux wrote in his great history of the World War.

Plays Same Role

Today President Roosevelt plays the same role that President Wilson played at that time. President Roosevelt's Ambassadors likewise have encouraged the French and British Ministers with the promise of American aid to hold out, and again White House propaganda is employing all thinkable and unthinkable means in order to make the American people war-minded.

The establishment of the so-called League of Nations was due to the intention to organize the domination of the victor powers of Versailles over the world. One of the basic points was to abolish the right of neutrality and to prevent a peaceful regulation of laws. Thus Britain at the League session of September 12, 1924 refused to submit to the obligation to leave the decision in cases of dispute to the newly-established permanent International Court of Law in the Hague.

For future Anglo-Saxon world domination, it is one of the premises that no code of law pertaining to the sea be created, no objective prize court be established and no obligations whatever be submitted to, to leave the decision in cases of dispute to law courts. These aims have nothing to do with the will of the nations. They are the manifestations of a clique of financiers, who hitherto have ruled the world through their money and sea power ,and who are trembling today that they might be dislodged from their dominating position. British-American war aims are not the establishment, but the oppression of "Freedom of the Seas."

'CHUTIST ALMOST DIES IN RECORD ATTEMPT

Hopkins Tears Auxiliary Parachute Open With Own Hands

United Press.

RAPID CITY, South Dakota, October 13.—George S. Hopkins, self-asserted world champion parachutist, narrowly escaped death when both of his parachutes failed to open during an attempt to break the world record of the most jumps in a single day.

Mr. Hopkins, who recently made the headlines when he descended on to a 800-foot monolith known as Devil's Tower and remained on top for six days before being rescued, was out to break the record of 81 parachute jumps in a single day.

The parachutist fell several thousand feet as his parachute failed to open. His auxiliary parachute also failed to open. Finally, before the eyes of thousands of horrified spectators at the airport he tore the auxiliary parachute open with his hands and landed safely.

He was cut and bruised for he landed on a rock pile after his fourteenth jump. Physicians said that he could not attempt any more jumps in his present condition.

Climate Too Ideal

I.N.S.

LOSEY FIELD, Puerto Rico, September 28.—The ideal climate of Puerto Rico proved too even for Sgt. Michael Ryan of the U. S. Army Air Corps. He so stated in his request for a transfer. Military authorities studied the matter and Sergeant Ryan, a trifle skeptical, is now en route to his new post—at Reykjavik, Iceland.

MICHIGAN DEFEATS NORTHWESTERN XI

On West Coast, Northern Teams Generally Show Superiority Over South

United Press

NEW YORK, October 18.—Forty-seven thousand rabid Northwestern fans ruefully surveyed a shattered Homecoming weekend celebration tonight as a mighty Michigan eleven scored a stunning 14 to 7 upset over the Wildcats to the feature game of today's gridiron schedule.

Odds-on favorites to take the game, the Wildcats found themselves outmaneuvered and outfought for four quarters, and Coach Lynn Waldorf's lads for the second consecutive year found their Big Nine title hopes blasted by the Ann Arbor crew who last year defeated Northwestern by a similar one touchdown margin.

Minnesota in Way

As a result of their brilliant victory at Evanston, Michigan found itself with only Minnesota lying between it and a Big Nine championship. Minnesota, however, showed tremendous power in crushing Pittsburgh, 39 to 0.

In the second Big Nine game of the day, Ohio State took a narrow 16 to 14 victory over the Purdue Boilermakers at Lafayette, enabling the Columbus gang to maintain their undefeated record. Wisconsin trounced Iowa, 23 to 0, in another conference game while Indiana left the conference to take a 21 to 13 win over the highly-touted Cornhuskers from Nebraska.

Swede Larsen's Navy eleven kept their unbeaten string intact and established themselves as one of the leading clubs in the east when they trounced hitherto undefeated Cornell, 17 to 0.

The Navy, before a crowd of 60,000 spectators at Baltimore, easily took the game after a slow start, and Middie supporters began hailing their club as a "wonder team"—The Navy has scored 132 points so far this year to two points for the opposition.

Army kept its 1941 slate clean by trouncing the Yale Bulldogs in their traditional clash, 20 to 7. Army unleashed terrific power before 56,000 fans jamming the Yale Bowl and after a see-saw battle in the first quarter, easily took the lead and held it.

Notre Dame also continued to hold the limelight as one of the nation's top-notch team by beating Carnegie Tech, 16 to 0. Other big games saw Pennsylvania smash Princeton, 23 to 0, while Harvard eked out a narrow 7 to 0 decision from its traditional Big Green rivals from Dartmouth.

In the Far West, the northern teams generally showed superiority over the "Big Names" from the south, with Oregon defeating the hapless University of California Bears, 19 to 7.

Huskies Beat Bruins

The University of Washington Huskies took a 14 to 7 decision from the Bruins of the University of California at Los Angeles, and thereby injected Jimmy Phelan's lads back into the conference picture although they have been defeated by Oregon State.

The University of Southern California won their first victory of the year with a 7 to 6 decision over the Washington State College Cougars who lost to Washington last week.

Santa Clara upheld western prestige by trimming Michigan State College, 7 to 0, in a game that brought together two of the major independent teams of the nation. Santa Clara is the only still unbeaten major team west of the Rockies, and Michigan State is considered one of the best independent teams in the rest of the country.

In the south, Alabama's Crimson Tide beat their traditional rivals from Tennessee, 9 to 2.

'We Want a Touchdown!'

Jimmy Wada picked up several yards on the runback of a punt in the second quarter of the Keio-Meiji football game played Wednesday at the Korakuen stadium. Meiji hog-tied Keio to the tune of 24 to 0 to establish themselves as the "team to beat" in the Kanto Inter-collegiate Football League play.

MEIJI ELEVEN RUNS OVER KEIO 24 TO 0

Offense Clicks Brilliantly While Defense Smashes Every Loser's Drive

The Meiji University football team uncorked a brilliant 24 to 0 victory over Keio Wednesday afternoon in a Kanto intercollegiate football game in the Korakuen stadium. The boys from Surugadai were sizzling hot, and they ran through, over and around a bewildered Keio eleven in what previously had been considered to be a close game.

Four touchdowns were scored by the Meiji team, and three of these were set up by an amazing passing attack that had the defending champion's running around in circles. The last of the touchdown was personally accounted for by Obana, who turned a seemingly touchdown drive of Keio into a boomerang by intercepting a pass and running ninety-eight yards for a score.

It was a superb exhibition that the Meiji eleven gave and they gained sweet revenge from the beating they took last fall from this same Keio outfit.

Meiji beat Keio in the opening quarter by jamming over two touchdowns. The first which came after an exchange of kicks gave the ball to Meiji on Keio's 30-yard line. Two cracks through the center and a Wada-Kawashima reverse lateral gave a first down on the 10-yard line.

On the first play Wada calmly tossed to Kunimoto on the 4. On the next play Wada picked up a yard and then Obana smashed over center for the touchdown. A Wada pass was unsuccessful for the conversion and Meiji led 6-0.

The second touchdown of the opening session came when Miyoshi had a punt blocked on him. In the scramble a Meiji linesman recovered on Keio's 20-yard line. Two shots at the line gained little but on third down Fukunaga connected with Oda on a arching pass and Meiji was a yard away from pay-dirt. Obana failed to make the distance but Wada cracked off-tackle for the touchdown. The place kick went astray and Meiji led 12 to 0.

The startled Keio eleven just began to roll in the second quarter. But the Meiji line stiffened and Keio lost possession of the ball on Meiji's 45-yard line. Again Meiji set the stage for their third touchdown with a rain of successful passes, bringing the ball to Keio's 8.

One play before the half Fukunaga shot over center for the score. The conversion failed and Meiji walked off the field leading 18-0.

Keio seemingly had the invincible Meiji team on the run at the start of the third quarter. A slashing drive spearheaded by Ibaragi and Tazawa moved the ball from Keio's 35 to Meiji's 20 yard line. With fourth and a yard to go for a first down the charging Meiji forward line stopped Ibaragi and Meiji took over. They moved up to two first downs but a pass was intercepted by Miyoshi who lateraled to Ibaragi on his 35 and Ibaragi raced to Meiji's 15.

Sensing a touchdown the Keio eleven banged their way for six yards in two cracks at the line. Tazawa then failed to connect with a pass in the end zone and Keio with fourth and four to go for a first down on the 8 elected to pass again.

Tazawa this time rifled a pass down the center. The ball shot into the startled arms of Obana, who momentarily held his ground. Recovering his composured Obana dodged the first cordon of Keio tacklers and raced his way down the field.

Not a bluejerseyed Keioite placed a hand on him as Obana rambled 98-yard for a touchdown that gave Meiji a 24-0 lead.

Thoroughly beaten but still fighting with determination Keio worked up a drive in the final quarter that saw them reach Meiji's 25. However, this splurge was nipped as Keio fumbled on a pass lateral and Meiji recovered on their 14-yard line.

The line-up:

Meiji	Keio
L.E.—Oda	Tomita
L.T.—Ikeda	Tanifuchi
L.G.—Koga	Tsugami
C. —Terada	Tatsu Yoshida
R.G.—Nikaido	Teru Yoshida

FOUR EVENTS SET AT Y.C.A.C. GROUNDS

Club's Undefeated Rugby Team Will Meet Waseda Denki XV

Rugby, soccer, hockey and tennis will comprise the sports program at the Yokohama Country and Athletic Club this weekend. An added attraction will be the dinner dance in the clubhouse Saturday.

The club's undefeated and unscored on rugby team will play its third game of the season Saturday afternoon when it meets the Waseda Denki fifteen at 3 p.m.

The dinner dance in the evening will be an informal affair at which the prizes of the club's spring tennis tournament will be awarded the winners. "Bucky" Shirakata and his Aloha Hawaiians, the popular orchestra which has played at many of the Y.C. and A.C. dances, will offer the latest hits from 7 p.m.

Special Dinner Planned

S. Weil, the new manager, whose culinary art has been famous in these parts for a number of years, has planned a special dinner for the occasion. This has proved a great incentive to attend and many reservations have already been made. Those planning to take part are being requested to make their reservations as soon as possible, if they have not already done so.

There will be two soccer games on Sunday morning. The club's second eleven will open the activities when they play against the N.Y.K. footballers at 10 a.m. The feature contest is scheduled to get under way at 11:15 a.m., with the Y.C. and A.C. first eleven booked to meet the Rikkyo University team.

The club's lady hockey players will take the field at 1.30 p.m. Sunday for a practice game, and all members of the so-called weaker sex interested in the sport are being urged to turn out.

Intra-club Match

The men will play an intra-club match from 2:15 p.m. and all members wishing to take up this game will be welcomed.

With many of the competitors in the tennis tournament having been away last weekend in view of Friday and Saturday having been holidays, the tennis courts are expected to be in great demand with a number of first round and bracketed bye matches still to be played off.

The Y.C. and A.C. line-ups for the various winter games this weekend will probably be as follows:

FAVORS BLITZ CONCERTS TO GET USED TO RAIDS

American Psychiatrist Says Terror Could Be Defeated By Such Noise

United Press

LEICESTER, October 20.—Five-minute blitz concerts of air raid noises to be broadcast weekly were suggested yesterday by Dr. A. E. Carver, specialist in nervous and mental afflictions, during an address to members of the civil defence. He said noise medicine would defeat terror arising from the noise of air raids.

"When father, mother and sister Susie simply compared one blitz concert with another, they would hardly know or care whether—when lying at ease in a Morrison or Andersons shelter—they were listening to the real thing or a recording," he said.

"Conditioning of the nervous system would prevent sirens inducing an attack of the jitters, leaving the mind clear and free to deal with all problems created by falling bombs," he added.

BRITISH MAIL LOST

Transocean

STOCKHOLM, October 13.—W. S. Morrison, the British Postmaster-General, announced yesterday that mail posted in England to Ceylon on July 9 and 11 was lost due to enemy action, according to a London report.

The same applies to letters as well as printed matter posted in Egypt to Britain on June 21 and July 10. In addition, mail posted in Cyprus, the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan and Palestine to England between March 23 and April 10 was lost in the same way, it was stated.

3,700,000 Work Days Are Lost by Strikes, Announces Stimson

Transocean

WASHINGTON, October 14.—Strikes in United States armament factories working for the American armed forces have caused the loss of 3,700,000 working days since January 1st, Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson announced, according to the New York World Telegram. This figure does not include the time lost by strikes in shipyards, arsenals, and aircraft factories. At the present time there are 28 major strikes going on in the American armament industry. These involve 35,000 workmen. Also labor disputes have broken out in many small armament plants.

CAMERA FANS FACE SUPPLY LACK IN U.S.

Government Orders to Be Filled First—Amateurs May Have To Go Without

CHICAGO.—Sooner or later the camera fan is going to find the national defense program coming into view when he sets out on a spree of picture taking. And when he does, he'll see fewer and possibly no new gadgets, substitute materials for metal reflectors, tripods, and synchronizers, fewer new lenses, and possibly less paper for printing and developing. For not only are manufacturers faced with priority regulation of metals, but Government orders are cutting into production for civilian use, it was disclosed at the Photographic Industry Convention and Trade Show held here recently. The event was sponsored by the Photographers' Association of America and the National Photographic Dealers' Association.

Competing With U.S.

Uncle Sam has also become a camera fan, and because he's going into photography for serious purposes and with the welfare of the Nation at heart, Government orders come first. In fact, officials of the convention disclose that the Government is buying about 300,000 different photographic items. Manufacturers are swamped with orders for all types of cameras along with large supplies of related equipment. For in addition to greatly expanding aerial photography facilities, practically every Army unit is to be equipped with a number of cameras and complete permanent and mobile darkrooms. Lense factories, are also busy filling orders for military and naval instruments, including the production of range-finders for battleships which require two years to complete.

Priority control is shutting off practically all aluminum which has been used for reflectors, synchronizers, and many camera parts. Miniature cameras and those extra gadgets, all made of metal, which always take the camera fan's eye, will be particularly hard hit, officials report. However, they say that picture taking will go on just as merrily as before, only with substitute materials. Some manufacturers expect to return to wood, formerly used almost exclusively.

Soldiers Boom Business

There's a brighter side to the picture, too, and the draft is the cause of it. Portrait photographers who say they never really recovered from the depression, are now enjoying a booming business. The minute a man goes into uniform, all of his friends and relatives want a picture, they say, and he in turn wants a picture of the folks and the girl back home to take to camp with him. Even mountings and folders for the picture reflect the signs of the times, decorated as they are with Army, Marine, Naval, and Air Corps insignia.

The fact that the boys want to take a camera to camp and do a lot of picture taking there and while on furlough has kept the sale of small cameras and the photo finishing business booming. In fact, officials report, the entire amateur business, although it reached its peak a year or so ago, continues to thrive. The picture taking hobby has grown so in the past several years that the number of recognized photographic supply houses has increased from 300 to more than 3,000. Camera stores are found everywhere—even on the top of one of the country's highest mountain peaks, and camera equipment departments are found in variety stores, hardware stores, gift shops, and even grocery stores.

The hobby has literally taken on a new hue with the rising popularity of color photography, which is now open to the newest amateur and to even a limited budget. Photographer dealers note that the yearning to take color pictures often appears during vacations when mountains, lakes, clouds, blue sky and other beautiful scenery send people scurrying to camera stores to supplement their equipment with color film and material. After that? "Just ask any color fan," they say.

with the monkey: Dokan dressed in his formal costume and armed with a whip, passed by where the monkey was tied by a string, and as he passed, he administered a good blow to the animal till he remembered Dokan's face.

On the morrow, when Dokan was found in the Shogunal presence, the monkey, ready to spring on him, recognizing his monitor of the day before, crawled and cringed before him; which Yoshimasa seeing, was said to be deeply impressed with Dokan's brave personality. By the way, it ought to be remembered that with all his dilletantism and his addiction to luxury and pleasure, Yoshimasa in his latter years had suffered a martyrdom of spiritual misery such as few human beings have ever experienced—a just retribution for the monkey tricks he had played on others.

CRICKET STATISTICS OF Y.C.A.C. RELEASED

Major Himatsinhji Gains Top Honors—Captain Stephens Second High

Statistics compiled of the recently concluded cricket season at the Yokohama Country and Athletic Club disclose that Major K. S. Himatsinhji gained top honors in both the individual batting and fielding averages.

The Major, who belongs to the famous Sinhji cricket family which has seen two of its members play for England in international matches, had a fine batting average of 30.00 and a good bowling average of 5.30.

Sydney Stephens, the captain, was second high in the batting with an average of 21.50, while A. G. May was the runner-up in the bowling with an average of 5.94.

Season Most Successful

The season was a most successful one, especially when the difficulties faced by the players are taken into consideration. Much credit is due to the committee for the fine results obtained, and especially to Stephens, Major Himatsinhji, Gordon Meadows, J. R. V. Mason and Professor H. A. Bird, who did much to create the keen interest which was evident.

The records, compiled by the captain, show that exactly 50 men played in one or more games this season.

Some fine batting and bowling performances were turned in. In batting, five players made half-centuries, these being Major Himatsinhji, Stephens, P H. Gore-Booth, J. A. Sargeant and G. E. Beatty.

The batting averages listed below give the best 20, and include only those players who bat at least five times. Also given are the best 15 bowling averages, with only players who bowled at least 10 overs being taken into consideration.

MANILA MINING MAGNATE SEES DEFENSE OFFICIALS

Arrives in Washington and Pledges Every Cooperation By P.I.

United Press

WASHINGTON, October 17.—John W. Hausserman, Manila mining magnate, arrived in Washington yesterday and conferred with Administration and defense officials preparatory to departing for Manila.

He praised the cooperation of the defense officials in the priorities department and pledged to give them all necessary facilities at the huge Benguet mining interests in the Philippines.

He said that the Benguet mines would produce all the chromium needed for specialized defense purposes.

Mr. Hausserman revealed that the Government had arranged to provide bottoms to transport vital defense materials from the Philippines to the United States.

He also said that he was encountering no difficulties in obtaining priorities for gold production.

STEEL SHORTAGE DELAYS SHIPBUILDING IN AMERICA

N. Y. Times Reveals Shipyards Lack Important Material

Transocean

NEW YORK, October 10.—Acceleration of the American shipbuilding program is being hampered by the steel shortage in the United States, the New York Times revealed yesterday.

This newspaper reported that work on two new destroyers under construction in the Philadelphia Navy Yard had been delayed for two months by the lack of steel.

For the same reason, the laying of the keel for a new United States battle cruiser had been postponed.

Conditions are similar in other American shipyards, the New York Times claimed.

SHORTAGE OF MEN BOGS DOWN BRITAIN

More Labor Needed for Production—Using Troops Means Small Army

D.N.B.

MADRID, October 23.—Luis Calvo, the London correspondent of the A.B.C. reported from London that England was either facing the problem of having arms, but no army, or of having an army without arms.

"If workers are turned into soldiers the army will be without equipment, without tanks, and without airplanes, materials which, above all, are bitterly needed by the British allies," said the correspondent. On the other hand, if the soldiers are sent back to the factories there will be a shortage of men in the army and the safety of the island is endangered.

"President Roosevelt's special envoy John D. Biggers declared on his return to Washington that the shortage of men was one of England's biggest problems. The British are lacking manpower in order to keep up a large navy, army and airforce at the same time, and, besides, to be able to turn out as much arms from the country's production as possible."

An article in the Daily Mail requested the Government to get hold of all evaders, men and women, who must be punished as parasites of the British people and placed in useful occupation for the benefit of the entire nation at a moment when the existence of England is being threatened by the impending capture of Leningrad, Moscow and Rostov, which might mean the disaster of the Soviet Union.

Production was, as the war had shown, the most important thing and it was more urgent to have a small army with excellent equipment than a large army with poor and insufficient equipment, the article stated.

Mr. Calvo closed his report by saying the publication of Lord Gort's report about Dunkirk had taught the British at least one lesson: as long as their army did not surpass the German army in the number of tanks and other war materials, there could be no thought of dispatching an expeditionary force to the Continent.

BRITISH SURVIVORS SAY SHARKS EAT 7 OF THEM

Sea Beasts Constantly Jabbed At Their Legs and Arms

Reuters

LONDON, October 21.—Three out of 12 men who spent five and a half days on a small raft in the Atlantic trying to keep off sharks, which nevertheless ate seven of them, have now arrived in England. The Spanish ship which rescued the survivors took them to Teneriffe.

The story of their harrowing adventures was told by 24 year-old Second Lieutenant R. E. G. Cox, of the British Army in India. Although exhausted the men had constantly to elude sharks which viciously jabbed at their legs and arms.

"Our frail craft overturned hundreds of times, and each time we managed to get back on it before the sharks could get us. One man, strapped to the side in a life-jacket, was washed away, and another who swam after him was killed by a big fish. Lack of food and water began to tell on us.

"One by one men went back and fell victim to the sharks until only three of us remained. Then at last we sighted the Spanish ship, and waved a ship's torch. Later our ship picked up a boatload of other suvivors and took us to Teneriffe."

Iran Is Key Position as Soviet's Supply Route

Russia into the picture has now extended this possible front to include the Caucasus and Russian Turkestan.

Arrangements in Progress

If the main Russian armies are defeated, the Germans may yet be denied access to any petroleum supplies by the arrangements which are now in progress, arrangements to which the possession of the Iranian railway system may prove of vital consequence. No one, therefore, could imagine that the Allied Powers could possibly permit large numbers of German nationals to remain at key positions along this railway system, and if the Iranian Government has been so blind to its obvious interests as to desire and suppose that this state of affairs would be endured it has now been undeceived.

It is a harsh necessity which has been forced upon the Allied Powers by Iranian stubborness and blindness, but for the future liberties of Iran as well as those of every other small and weak people, it is a necessity which has had to be met and dealt with; not, fortunately, too late this time.

ARCHBISHOP CREATED AT ANCIENT CHURCH

1,000-Year Old Paderborn Cathedral Is Scene Of Consecration

Transocean

COLOGNE, October 20.—Papal Nuncio Cesare Orsenigo yesterday consecrated in the 1,000-year old Paderborn Cathedral Lorenz Jaeger as the new Archbishop of Paderborn.

Thousands of people, including many farmers from the countryside surrounding Paderborn, crowded the Cathedral, the oldest wing of which was built as early as the eighth century.

The ceremony lasted from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. and was attended by many high Catholic dignitaries.

At the same time, all other Paderborn churches were overcrowded during the special divine services on the occasion of the consecration of the new Archbishop whose predecessor died a few months ago.

The new Archbishop of Paderborn, is a veteran of World War I, in which he served as Captain and was awarded the Iron Cross 1st and 2nd Class.

Since the outbreak of the present war, Lorenz has been active as divisional chaplain with the fighting forces. He has now been exempted from military service in order to allow him to assume the archbishopric. Jaeger was an active promoter of the Catholic youth movement in Germany.

The ceremony at the Paderborn Cathedral was attended by almost all German bishops and archbishops. The German Government was also represented by a special envoy, while the Provincial Government of Westphalia was represented by a high Government Councillor, and the city of Paderborn by its Mayor, Kosink. The Military Commander of Paderborn attended as representative of the armed forces. Numerous high-ranking army officers were also present at the ceremony.

Following his consecration the new Archbishop addressed those present, promising them that he would always be there to impart to the people the language taught by Christ. In his address to the congregation he mentioned that he had received the news of his appointment to the archbishopric while in the midst of his soldiers. His thoughts at the moment were with those at the front who were defending home and country, he said. The archbishop emphasized that they were not only fighting for the fatherland but also for Christianity and the annihilation of atheist Bolshevism. Christianity and a soldierly attitude are more closely connected than some might think, he concluded.

U.S. Scientists Study On Lighting Mystery

charge, following the suggestion by Dr. C. T. E. Wilson, of England, that the ctentials in a thunder cloud should produce highspeed electrons with an energy as high as 5,000,000,000 volts.

Dr. Schoenland found the highspeed particles in his cosmic-ray detectors. From theoretical considerations the particles should curl around the earth's magnetic lines of force and appear as a shower on the east side of the lightning flash. Dr. E. C. Haliday, an associate of Dr. Schoenland, has investigated this expected distribution and found it does not exist, he reports in a communication in the August issue of "Physical Review."

Dr. Haliday's work raises a doubt as to whether the cosmic rays observed result from the lightning flash. This opens a question as to whether the cosmic rays may be the cause of the flash. Our present theories of how lightning is generated are weak in a number of aspects, so there is considerable doubt as to whether they represent the correct picture of what happens in a thunder cloud.

On Way to Crush Remnants

Japanese troops are engaged in campaigns against fugitive Chungking-controled soldiers, who are still running amok over areas covering South Shantung and North Kiangsi provinces which were placed under occupation of the Japanese Army a few years ago. These fugitive Chungking soldiers are not different from armed bandits disliked by law-abiding Chinese people. The picture shows a unit of the Japanese soldiers fording a river dragging motor trucks with ropes.

AMERICA IS FINDING STEEL SCRAP SHORT

Country Begins to Realize May Not Be Enough Even for Defense Program

The United States has awakened to the distasteful realization that steel production of civilian use and perhaps even for national defense may have to be restricted soon because of inadequate supplies of steel scrap, says an article in the New York Herald Tribune, which continues:

Emphasis was placed upon the seriousness of the situation by Irving S. Olds, of United States Steel, Corp., by "The Iron Age" and by Eugene C. Grace, of Bethlehem Steel Corp.

Discussion naturally focused on the necessity of tapping new sources of supply and suggestions in this respect were liberally sprinkled with criticism seeking to allocate the blame for the predicament in which the industry finds itself.

On the constructive side it developed that a number of producers who formerly depended on independent suppliers have set up collection agencies of their own, and that some scrap is being imported from Cuba and Mexico.

In the mean time, steelmakers were said to have made representations to the government on two counts.

The first of these urged the inauguration of a nation-wide scrap collection campaign, in which the railroads would cooperate in transporting material and by scrapping unprofitable trackage, and by efforts to have steel for British account shipped in finished form so far as possible instead of ingots and semi-finished, in order to retain scrap resulting from finishing mill operations in the United States.

Coal Strike Is Cited

On the question of responsibility, producers and scrap collectors were, as usual, found to be on opposite sides. Steelmakers were inclined to blame heavy exports to Japan, Italy and other foreign countries, for the current domestic shortage. The Institute of Scrap Iron & Steel, representing the collecting interests, asserted that if the gathering of scrap were possible lots more would be available, and alleged that the "price ceiling" established by the Office of Price Administration and Civilian Supply would have to be lifted to remedy the situation. The institute further indicated its opinion that the scrap industry was being weakened by the action of the companies in setting up their own collection systems.

With all this no mention was heard of the effects of the prolonged coal strike earlier in the year on the current scrap steel situation. Several authorities who were queried on this point admitted that the relationship of the strike and the present shortage might be important. For example in normal steel producing operations in this country, pig iron and scrap are used in about equal amounts to make ingots. During the coal strike many concerns, including U. S. Steel, were obliged to bank or blow out a number of blast furnaces because of lack of coke and found themselves short of pig iron. The proportion of scrap iron and steel used was consequently increased in charging furnaces in order to maintain ingot output around the capacity levels which then prevailed. The result was greatly depleted scrap piles.

Figures on scrap consumption for the first half of 1941 reflect this extraordinary use of scrap, partly to make up for the temporary shortage of pig iron. For the six months ended June 30 the scrap melt was 26,533,000 gross tons, an amount which exceeded by 46 per cent the consumption for the first half of 1940. Against this increase, it is to be noted, steel ingot production was up only about 20 to 25 per cent.

Export Ratio Shown

Exports accounted for only a trifle of the total of scrap consumption in the first half of 1941, amounting to 350,715 gross tons, compared with 1,152,341 tons in the like 1940 period. In the last eight years, it is estimated, about 25,000,000 tons of scrap have been sold to foreign countries.

Commenting on this, the Scrap Institute emphasizes that domestic mills could have purchased the scrap and built up reserves, but did not do so; that exports were made with the approval of the State Department, and that at the time the business was most welcome to the scrap dealers who in the main are "little fellows" who have to keep selling to maintain their collection set-ups.

This brings up the point of whether higher prices for scrap, or some sort of a bonus plan for collections, would be of material aid in remedying the shortage. For the most part, steel and scrap industries agree on the point that large, reservoirs of unused materials exist, a good deal of it in out-of-the way areas.

One of the largest potential supplies, it is estimated, would be automobile graveyards. Utilization of this form of scrap, however, presents its special problem. It is difficult to handle, even after cars are dismantled and the wood end other metals removed. Some method of crushing and baling for shipment has been suggested. Another important source, which would present less of a shipping problem, are unused and obsolete railroad lines and rolling stock.

Unfortunately, however, the simple expedient of a higher price to stimulate collections would not solve the problem from the government's view, no matter how welcome it might be to the scrap and even steel trades. The ceilings on scrap prices as on many other materials have been established for the specific purpose of preventing inflation.

Nara Still Rich in Ancient Color, Flavor

century. In the Kefukigusa, a book written in the middle of the 17th century, are mentioned all sorts of Nara specialties.

Among those which have survived are bleached cotton, mosquito nets, India ink-sticks, lacquerware, fans, pickles and "sake." That each community grew with its industrial development may be inferred from some of the place-names of present-day Nara. An example or two may suffice. Eyamachi ("eya" meaning "picture-shop") is where artists used to paint pictures and picture-scrolls at the request of the nobility and the clergy. It may be mentioned that artists began to draw illustrations for books about that time. Similarly, the community of swordsmiths gave rise to the name of Kanenagamachi, Kanenage being the name of a noted sword maker.

When the temples began to lose their power, there arose a tendency among the nobility to regard Nara as a pleasure resort rather than a religious center. As early as the 14th century there were the so-called eight views of Nara; namely, the wistarias of Nanendo, the fireflies of the River Saho, the moon mirrored in the Sarusawa Pond, the deer of Kasugano, the snow on Mikasayama, the rain at Kumoizaka, the booming-voiced bell of Todaiji and the wayfarers on Todoroki Bridge. Many of the Yedo poets sang of the scenic charms of Nara, while the traditions of Nara gave rise to valuable historical researches in the Yedo Period. Interest in this classic city thus gradually became nation-wide.

Traditions of Old City

Although the religious authority of the Nara fanes finally collapsed, the traditions of this ancient city were not forgotten by the masses. The annual events which take place in connection with Todaiji Kofukuji and Kasuga Shrine speak eloquently of the keen interest evinced by the common people of Nara since ancient times. The time-honored festivals and other customs, too, seem to be enveloped in the aura of ages gone by.

The fourth and last stage of Nara's development is marked by various changed and changing aspects showing the influence of modern civilization. With this side of the subject, however, it is not the purpose of the present article to deal. Suffice it to say that, as we remarked at the beginning, Nara is as much an old city as a modern one. While constantly at pains to preserve the legacies of its brilliant past, Nara has not been slow to realize the expediency, if not the necessity, of keeping abreast of the times, of enjoying the fruit of the machine age characterized by speed, smoke and steel.

U.S. IS PREPARING ANTI-TANK GROUPS

Army Orders 3 New Fast-moving Units Designed to Harry Armored Forces

Organization of three fast-moving new anti-tank groups designed to break through an enemy's advance units and harry and shatter his armored forces before they are prepared for battle has been ordered by the American Army's general headquarters, says a Washington dispatch dated August 16.

The units, making up a force of about 6,000 men, have been designated provisional G. H. Q. anti-tank groups, and will be tested in the great war games between the 2nd and 3rd armies in Louisiana.

The War Department said each group will be composed of three battalions, will be fully motorized and will be armed with 37 and 75-millimeter guns.

The intention, the department said, is to develop "tank-shattering gunfire that will be flexible enough to surpass the speed of any armored force and massive enough to defeat it."

Intensive Training

Nine existing anti-tank units will be combined in the provisional groups. Lieutenant General Lesley J. McNair, G. H. Q. chief of staff, directed that Lieutenant General Walter Krueger, 3rd Army commander, select a concentration point at which to begin intensive training before the Louisiana maneuvers.

General McNair said that working closely with aircraft and scouting forces they should locate and keep contact with enemy armored units and take advantage of favorable opportunities to "attack such units with massed gunfire."

Organization of the anti-tank groups was left to General Krueger. Four anti-tank battalions and five field artillery battalions were placed at his disposal.

The anti-tank battalions, made up of about 700 officers and men each, divided into three companies of 12 .37-millimeter guns each, are:

94th Anti-Tank Battalion, 4th Army Corps 3rd Army, Fort Benning Georgia.

101st Anti-Tank Battalion, 3rd Army. Fort Benning.

102nd Anti-Tank Battalion, 5th Army Corps, 3rd Army, Camp Shelby, Mississippi.

104th Anti-Tank Battalion, 8th Army Corps, 3rd Army, Fort Sam Houston, Texas.

The field artillery battalions, numbering 675 officers and men apiece, are equipped with four batteries of 75's, each battery having eight guns. They are:

18th Field Artillery Brigade 8th Army Corps 3rd Army, Fort Sill, Oklahoma.

72nd Field Artillery Brigade, 2nd Army, Fort Leonard Wood, Missouri.

73rd Field Artillery Brigade, 5th Army Corps, 3rd Army, Camp Shelby, Mississippi.

DEFENSE OF MANILA URGED IN AMERICA

Early Congressional Approval Stressed for Joint Army And Navy Projects

United Press

WASHINGTON, October 21.—Administration sources yesterday told the United Press that successive developments in the Far East and Europe had increased the imperativeness of Philippines defense measures.

These sources said it was essential to secure as soon as possible Congressional approval of Philippines defense authorizations so as to give the green light to War, Navy and Commonwealth officials in joint defense projects.

Administration sources, although displeased with the Senate's action attaching a gold authorization repeal rider to the bill it approved, said the Administration had no alternative but to support the speediest passage of whatever bill Congress evolved.

They hinted that if the bill came to conference between the Senate and House, the Administration would use its influence to secure deletion of the gold repeal rider.

The Senate bill is now pending before the House Insular Affairs Committee with Representative Leo Kocialkowski, Democrat of Illinois and committee chairman, reportedly undecided whether to take the course of least resistance and approve the Senate bill or try and get the House to approve the original measure.

Flocking to Washington

United Press

WASHINGTON, October 14.—Philippine business representative continued to arrive in Washington in a steady stream yesterday, seeking Federal permission and assistance to get necessary raw materials to the Philippines.

According to the best consensus of opinion thus far there has been no marked reward for their efforts, although officials have proved highly cooperative and expressed a keen desire to lean backwards to assist the Philippines.

Former Manila officials now in high posts in the Government have been asked to help and have actively intervened in several cases.

The latest arrivals were M. E. Kessler, manufacturer of canned foods and Verna Miller, of the Philippine Educational Association, seeking paper.

Government officials were understood to have promised special efforts to meet the Philippine situation.

Other prominent Philippine business leaders who have been here now for some time expressed that they also had been told that their cases were "under study," believing that eventually there would be a solution when additional bottoms would become available for Pacific traffic.

WASEDA POWERHOUSE CRUSHES RIKKYO 58-7

Scores at Will and Makes 4 Conversions—Losers Tally Last Minutes

Showing tremendous power throughout the game, the Waseda football eleven crushed St. Paul's 58 to 7 in a Kanto inter-collegiate tilt played Saturday at the Korakuen stadium.

The Tomon gridsters were simply too over-loaded with power for the under-manned St. Paul's squad. They scored at will. Nine times Waseda crossed the goal-line for touchdowns. The winners made four conversions.

St. Paul's averted a shut-out by tallying a touchdown and a conversion in the final minutes of the game.

The score:

Waseda	12	19	14	13—58
St. Paul's	0	0	0	7— 7

PORTUGUESE TRADE DROPS

Imports for First 8 Months Drop 17.8 Per Cent

Transocean

LISBON, October 19.—Portuguese imports for the first eight months of this year amounted to 1,016,258 tons which is 17.8 per cent below the figure for the corresponding eight months of 1940. Portuguese exports show an even greater decline. During the past eight months 529,952 tons were exported, which is 34.2 per cent less than the export figure for the first eight months of 1940.

The Portuguese press emphasizes that Portugal cannot look on at such developments indifferently and that the country had means at its disposal whereby dangers threatening a further decline in Portuguese trade could be combatted.

Kato clan!" he wailed. "Our great master, Kiyomasa, was wont to wear thin armor, and yet he was victorious in every battle he fought because he was fearless of danger and never sought safety in thick armor. O that I should live to hear such words from the head of the Kato family!"

His son, Mitsumasa, though he combined the names of the two great warrior rulers, Iyemitsu and Kiyomasa, was, if possible, worse than his father. He was devoted to the company of second-rate men—the more stupid and pusillanimous his men the more they pleased him. His best favorite was Hirose Sobei the Coward whom he made the object of his constant jokes. At last Mitsumasa conceived what he thought a masterpiece of jokes. So one day he summoned the fool on what he called a matter of supreme importance and then pretended to confide him with a secret plan of conspiracy against the Shogunate; and to confirm this he showed a map of Yedo Castle and a scroll bearing the names and signatures of more than ten powerful daimyo alleged to be in collusion with the Katos, and he warned the coward: "You may be appointed one of the commanders to lead our troops when Yedo was to be invaded."

Sobei turned ashy pale, trembling like an autumnal leaf, at which his Lordship was immensely amused. But the poor Sobei was so overwrought under the crushing weight of the terrible secret that he positively became neurotic and did the fatal thing. He ran to Yedo and calling on one of the Rochu (Ministers of the Shogunate) and unbosomed himself of the horrible secret. Immediately an emergency council was summoned in the Shogunal Court with Sobei present to make personal testimony. His words and deportment at once proclaimed the truth: the Ministers knew he had been made the subject of a hoax. However, they chose to take a serious view of the case. They decided it was the most heinous joke that any hare-brained daimyo could possibly make. That a daimyo as powerful as the Lord of Higo should bandy about the so-called Map of the Shogunal Court together with the so-called Scroll of daimyo's names sworn to a dire conspiracy against the Shogunate, was a crass act of irreverence against the Shogun, not to be lightly passed over. Then over 20 past sins, already written in the Shogunal Book against the Kato clan, were subjected to the light of formal deliberation till at length the Rochu decided the Katos should be punished with degradation to a lesser clan.

Accordingly, Hirotada was transferred to Shonai of Dewa (Yamagata Prefecture) and Mitsumasa to Takayama in Hida, and in the 10th year of Kanyei (1633) Mitsumasa dying without issue, the Kato fief was pronounced extinct. Thus in the third generation of the mighty Kiyomasa—the very name which struck terror into the bosoms of foreign barbarians and which caused the babies to stop crying, the builder of Nagoya Castle and the far-famed Lord of Kumamoto—his seeds came to an ignominious end—all because of a poor practical joke.

MOVIE LOTS BAN VISITORS

Many Fans in Hollywood Disappointed by New Ruling

I.N.S.

HOLLYWOOD, California, October 3.—Disappointment awaits the visitor who comes to Hollywood today with the hope of seeing his favorite movie star on the sets.

Under a recent edict, necessitated in part by the production of films for national defense, visiting privileges—to all except newspaper correspondents actually "covering" Hollywood—have been suspended by the major studios.

Explaining the ban, Y. Frank Freeman, president of the Association of Motion Picture Producers, Inc., said that Army and Navy films were under way at each of the studios, and that they contained secret material.

Loss of production time caused by the visits also contributed to the ban, Freeman said. Lately the number of visitors at the studios had risen to 30,000 a month, according to another official, who estimated that the studios lost $2,000,000 a year because of the distractions incident to the flow of visitors.

Still another reason cited by Freeman is that the requests of visitors for admission to the studios have hampered publicity departments in their service to newspaper correspondents.

Besides, when they want that can of soup on the top pantry shelf they don't rave to disturb hubby's reading of the evening paper.

Y.C.A.C. TEAMS WIN ALL WEEKEND TILTS

Beat Waseda Denki Ruggers, Tame N.Y.K. Soccerites, And Humble Mariners

All three Yokohama Country and Athletic Club teams which played outside opposition over the weekend fared very well, each winning its game by a considerable margin. Every one of the three matches was held at the club grounds.

The Y.C. and A.C. rugby team defeated the Waseda Denki fifteen on Saturday afternoon by 53 to 3 to gain its third consecutive victory. On Sunday morning both the first and second soccer teams remained unbeaten this season after their contests, the firsts downing the Mariners Club by 6 to 1 and the seconds taking the measure of the N.Y.K. squad by 7 to 1.

The club ruggerites, who had been unscored on in their two previous matches, received a shock when the students scored a try within the first five minutes of Saturday's game to gain a 3 to 0 lead. Visions of a possible defeat as well as the jolt of having their unscored on record spoiled proved a great stimulant to the home team, for a try about five minutes later tied the score, and Planas' conversion gave it a 5 to 3 lead.

The winners kept pressing and by the time the halfway mark was reached they were ahead by 22 to 3. The clubbers never eased up and continued to add to their total after the interval, making another 31 points in the second half while holding the opposition scoreless. By the time Referee A.A.F. Shearer blew the final whistle the Y.C. and A.C. had scored 13 tries, seven of which were converted, to one for the students. Planas made good one kick from the sidelines which drew a big hand from the spectators.

The victors played a good all-round game; the forwards displaying their usual fine aggressiveness and the backs showing improvement in their passing and more thrust. They were short again, as in all their games this season, having only 13 men.

The Waseda players did very well at the start, and twice came very dangerously close to scoring in the second half, but could not match the standard of the opposition.

In their three games this season the Y.C. and A.C. fifteen has won all of them, scoring 122 points to a total of three against.

The line-ups follow:

Y.C. and A.C.: J. J. Planas; E. Eastlake, M. Jalenques, M. L. Russell; M. J. K. Stark, F. R. Harriss (captain); M. V. Fachtmann, A. A. Weiss, W. Salter, E. Salter, G. Agajan, A. L. Spence and M. Pestalozzi.

Waseda Denki: Suzuki; Kata, Kamijo, Tsutsumi, Tachikawa; Higuchi, Nakayama, Sachida; Hosokawa, Nishimura, Hamabe, Iwamura, Inouye, Matsuda and Manabe.

Club Eleven Wins Toss

The Y.C. and A.C. second soccer team won the toss in its game Sunday morning with the N.Y.K. squad, and chose to play with the wind behind their backs. This proved a considerable advantage and the home eleven did most of the pressing in the initial half.

After 10 minutes of play Beatty found the corner of the net to put the Y.C. and A.C. one up. Soon after Vorobioff made a fine dash down the wing, outran the defense and beat the goalie from close quarters. Rau made the score 3 to 0 in favor of the homesters just before the interval on a good pass from Vorobioff.

After the teams had changed sides the wind died down somewhat but the Tokyo players pressed, and eight minutes after the interval the N.Y.K. players scored during a melee in front of the net.

Although play during the remainder of the match was fairly even the winners were more effective in front of the goal, and Eastlake got the next brace while Rau made the following two to make up the total of seven.

The visitors played good football at times, but their action before the goalmouth was too undecided. Eymard played well in goal and made some good saves to hold the opposition to a solitary point.

The club halves and backs defended well, while the former also kept their forwards well fed. The front line functioned nicely, good passing leading to most of the goals.

Captain A. G. Stevens was the arbiter and Miss D. Stevens was one of the the linesmen.

The Y.C. and A.C. players were E. Eymard, M. V. Fachtmann, G. R. Fachtmann, U. L. F. Wendblagh, J. A. Dixon (captain), C. Heseltine, E. L. Gordes, R. Rau, E. Eastlake, G. E. Beatty and D. Vorobioff.

Mariners Play Well

In the feature game which followed, the Mariners Club played very clever football in midfield, but their finishing was faulty at times. Play was close during the first half but Planas got a pair of goals to put the home squad two up before the opposition got a point shortly before the interval.

The Y.C. and A.C. front line, which had felt considerably the absence of Rodriguez, the captain, in the first half, showed considerably better form after the interval. Makepeace made the score 3 to 1, and then Blamey and Frank raised the club's advantage to five.

The Mariners Club goalie, who had made some sterling saves to keep the home squad from scoring oftener, had one mishap. Near the end he blocked nicely a drive by Planas, but the ball slipped through his arms to roll over the line for the last goal of the match.

Both defenses played well, and the two custodians robbed the forwards time and again. The half lines were fairly evenly matched, but the winners' forwards showed up better than those of the opposition.

H. Fernandes refereed the good, fast and clean game.

Playing for the Y.C. and A.C. were E. R. Harriss, E. Eymard, L. A. M. Frank, H. Schoene (acting captain), G. Agajan, W. Blamey, S. Petroff, J. J. Planas, B. de Miranda and G. W. Makepeace.

Mixed Hockey Played

Another intra-club mixed hockey game was played on Sunday afternoon, with Ballantyne's squad taking the measure of Lord's by 3 to 1. Both sides used one more than the regulation eleven players.

With the winners' front line having more men than that of the captain's squad, the former did more of the attacking but was held to a solitary goal before the interval by the sturdy defense of Miss Louise Andreis and Major Himatsinhji. Beatty got the solitary goal made in the first half.

After the teams had changed over Lloyd found the net twice in succession with fine drives to make the count 3 to 0. The losers avoided a shutout when Agajan beat Goalie Helen Lord with a close in shot which gave her no chance to save.

Some of the ladies showed up very well, getting the better of their male opponents on a number of occasions. Outstanding was Miss Louise Andreis at fullback, who played a great game. Miss Juliet Darbier filled her right-half berth for the winners in fine style.

The game was referred by H. W. Armstrong.

The line-ups follow:

Lord's team: Miss L. Andreis, Miss D. Eastlake, Miss S. Therondel, Miss G. Satchell, G. Agajan, R. A. P. Craigie, C. Heseltine, Major K. S. Himatsinhji, P. H. Lord, F. Moysey and M. L. Russell.

Ballantyne's team: Miss G. Andreis, Miss J. Darbier, Miss H. Lord, Miss A. Stoukanoff, A. H. Ballantyne, G. E. Beatty, W. H. Blamey, F. J. Bond, J. O. Lloyd, R. Rau, Major E. V. Thomas and M. J. K. Stark.

Offer Their Service

Japan's home front is as solid as an iron ball. People in all walks of life are firmly entrenched themselves behind the battle front. How far they are conscious of the importance of their mission "behind the guns" is explained by this picture showing a group of Yushima geisha girls in Tokyo, who has just organized a women's volunteer corps for serving the country. About 180 of them Monday held an inaugural ceremony of their corps in the compound of the Yushima Tenjin Shrine in Hongo-ku through the aid of the Motofuji Police Station, Hongo. After the ceremony, they at once started buttoning military uniforms at the Hongo Geisha Business Office.

U.S. ARMY MORALE BEING QUESTIONED

Conscripts Don't Seem to Recognize Necessity for Working Up War Fever

"With the opening of military maneuvers in Louisiana, at a time when the (United States) War Department and the White House are concerned with the lack of morale among the rank and file soldiers—a situation emphasized by the appointment of Brigader-General Frederick H. Osborn as Chief of Morale of the U. S. Army," The Christian Science Monitor announced a survey of the situation.

An article on this subject in a recent issue of the paper, dealing with the feeling among the "selectees," as the conscripts are called, is as follows:

The thundering legions of Caesar had it. So did Napoleon's grenadiers, Stonewall Jackson's "Foot Cavalry," the American Expeditionary Force's famed Second Division and the Royal Air Force in th Battle of Britain. What is it? It's morale.

It's something we all feel but can't very well define. We know when it's missing but it's a little harder to tell when it's there. It shines through almost every page of American history and will shine through many more. But is it doing so today—particularly in the great civilian army which is now being knit together as a bulwark of America's precious heritage?

The very fact that morale has been called seriously into dispute by so many persons during the past few months indicates that there are depths to the question which have not been plumbed.

The Army itself has fully recognized, although not publicized the problem of morale among the selectees and National Guardsmen now being asked to give long months in training for a war which does not yet exist and which may not exist. In a most unusual step the War Department has appointed a civilian, Frederick Osborn, to head its morale division with the rank of brigadier general.

The French have a saying that "all generalities are dangerous including this one" and it is with such caution that most War Department officials approach the question of morale. Is morale really bad and, if so, how bad? Is low morale general throughout all branches of the service or only in certain ones? Do troops from certain sections show higher morale than those from different portions of the country? Finally, is the problem of morale a peacetime one only and would it disappear with American entry into hostilities?

In the first place, the most candid of the War Department's top-ranking officials admit that there are large segments of the Army in which morale, while perhaps not poor or low, is lukewarm enough to give them some concern.

In his recent testimony before the House Military Affairs Committee, when that body was considering the legislation extending the number and length of service of selectees, Chief of Staff General George C. Marshall gave public recognition of the question when he said "it is so unfortunate, so unfair, that just at a time when we are building an Army I have to fight a problem of morale for which I personally am to be held responsible. I refer to be held responsible. I refer to the inspired agitation that is going on among the troops."

In the face of such a statement, made a little more than a month ago, it seems indubitable that Army morale still leaves something to be desired and is something which must receive better and closer attention than it has heretofore received.

Behind General Marshall's statement three is documentary evidence that cannot be explained away, even if the War Department were making an effort to do so, which it is not. In War Department files there are records of conversations between civilians and soldiers to their homes, of soldier statements overheard by their officers and other similar indications of Army morale. All of these point to something very far from a fervor of intensity on the part of hundreds of thousands of men in khaki.

Although soldiers have, from time immemorial, groused about Army life, there is a difference between "beefing" and serious complaint. Unfortunately, there is evidence that many selectee statements fall into the latter category. "Beefing" usually confines itself with growing about the food, the drill sergeant or the monotony.

Discrimination Debated

Serious complaining, however, concerns itself very frequently with questioning as to the necessity for being in the Army and with charges that those in the Army are being discriminated against as compared with those who missed the draft. As the latter questions are those which seem most insistent to the selectees it is safe to assume that with some draftees today's morale question has disturbingly deep roots.

Newspaper interviews with selectees in Washington have disclosed that almost none of them are very happy about their term of training and that a great many of them are apparently just passing the time until it is time to be mustered out. Although much of it can be put down to youthful braggadocio, a sizeable percentage of the men threatened to leave after their year's service is up. While the great majority would not do so, it discloses an unmistakable desire to quit the Army. It also points up very strongly the failure of the Administration to convince the selectees of the necessity for their service.

There are, however, a number of encouraging aspects to the morale problem which have frequently been missed. Perhaps the most important is that any lack of morale has not been serious enough to prevent the training and hardening of the selectees called up, in addition, the War Department is fully convinced that any question of low morale would immediately be cleared up in the event that the United States went to war and soldier enthusiasm would be as great as in any American war of the past.

Some Units Better

Nor can the charge of low morale be brought with equal force against all branches of the service and all troops. As the War Department had fully expected, the morale of soldiers from the Southern and Mountain States has been found to be considerably higher than among selectees from the Northeast and the Middle West.

White soldiers from the deep South, and from the Southern Appalachians are said to be showing the same enthusiasm for the United States Army of 1941 as their grandfathers showed for the Confederate Army of 1861. Poorer economic conditions at home, a natural hankering for combat and a military tradition are believed to be largely responsible for this.

The same high morale is reported widespread among the country's Negro troops. War Department officials describe them as eager to master the art of warfare and as cheerful under trying conditions. The desire for a fuller participation in American life is believed to have contributed notably to this showing by America's Negro soldiers.

Among the various branches of the service, the morale problem seems greatest in the infantry, which many selectees find monotonous and uninspiring, besides being rather hard on the feet. On the other hand, morale is notably better in the Air Corps, in the armored units, the parachute battelions and among the anti-tank battalions now under formation.

Anti-tank Enthusiasm

The spirit felt by the troops in these chosen units which by the way, are the units which may well bear the brunt of any future fighting, was well reflected by a young anti-tank trooper riding on a bus to Fort George G. Meade, Maryland, the other day. Asked how he liked the work, he threw himself around in the seat, said that "It's positively the greatest work in the Army," and spent the next half hour describing the anti-tank maneuvers, just finished in Caroline County, Virginia.

In the anti-tank, armored and parachute units, officers say that it is an almost everyday occurrence for some soldier to some forward with a suggestion for improvement ranging from a change in tactics to a new combat car he has designed.

Although the feeling is general that morale can be raised only through a gradual process, the War Department reports evidence that it is on its way up. Word of this sort has just come from Brigadier-General James A. Ulio, retiring chief of the morale division.

W.C.T.U. 'Doing Its Bit'

Meantime, it appears from a Grand Rapids, Michigan, report dated September 2 to The Christian Science Monitor, that the well-known Woman's Christian Temperance Union is doing its best to make the new American army popular with the men composing it by working for the establishment of "dry zones" around the army camps. The story is as follows:

Mothers, fathers, and sisters of selectees, and everybody else interested in their welfare, are going to be urged by temperance workers all over the country to get behind the Sheppard bill now on the Senate calendar and push hard for its enactment. It is the bill, known as S. 860, which would empower authorities of the Army and Navy to establish dry zones around camps.

An appeal for such backing was made to the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union convention here today by Miss Elizabeth A. Smart, attorney, who is legislative representative of the organization in Washington. She received the support of the White Ribboners when they adopted a resolution she offered urging passage of the bill. They also approved resolutions calling for a ban on all advertising of liquor and for legislation requiring the use of the poison label on intoxicating drinks, but no immediate action on the second resolution is in prospect, said Miss Smart.

Out of its 67 years' experience in fighting the liquor traffic the National W. C. T. U. has acquired much practical wisdom. It doesn't attempt what seems impossible, but at the same time it keeps up the struggle when less seasoned warriors are ready to give up.

Timely Action Advised

That is why, right now, its legislative department director is not advising members to try to get immediate action on any temperance legislation that has no direct defense angle, such as the ban on liquor advertising, since Congress is absorbed with defense matters. On the other hand, although Miss Smart recognizes that the Sheppard bill faces powerful opposition, still she believes that this opposition can be overcome if enough public sentiment is expressed in its behalf.

Miss Smart is urging White Ribboners to put on their hats and go calling on their neighbors who have sons or brothers in the service, telling them about the Sheppard bill and urging them to write their Senators asking for its passage.

It is not a wet-dry issue, in her opinion. Many people with no strong objections to drink, Miss Smart says, deplore the springing up of a low type of tavern close to camps, taverns which aim directly at the soldier trade and are often of the very worst type.

Legislation embodying one provision of the Sheppard bill, that empowering the Army and Navy authorities to abolish red light districts adjacent to camps, has been passed, but it is "unrealistic," Miss Smart holds, since it does not banish taverns in the same areas.

World Outlook Kept

One encouraging move toward giving the Army the protection from liquor it had in 1917 was reported to this convention. No alcoholic liquor, not even 3.2 per cent beer, is to be served in connection with any United Service Organization program, according to a letter from the office of the National Administrative Secretary released here.

PEACE FEELERS HIT BY WILHELMSTRASSE

Says Allegations Just Subterfuge of British to Bolster Low Morale

D.N.B.

BERLIN, October 28.—Denying fresh British allegations concerning "German peace feelers" supposed to have been launched by the Duke of Bedford, the Wilhelmstrasse emphatically declared that the war which had been forced on Germany by England would not be ended by obscure pacifists nor by staged debates in the House of Commons or by any alleged German peace feelers, but merely by the victory of the German arms.

Wilhelmstrasse circles pointed to the repeatedly made experience to the effect that, whenever British public morale had come to a specially low point, the British Government resorts to the method of inventing alleged German peace offers.

It is stressed in Berlin that the British Government thus tries to make the British people believe that German economy and the German military machine is rapidly nearing the end of its reserves. The Wilhelmstrasse added that this time the British Government had been allegedly informed of certain American politicians having inside information of German peace feelers in which also certain U.S. religious institutions were included.

In the House of Commons Home Minister Herbert Morrison announced that the Duke of Bedford by no means should be permitted to travel to Ireland because there he would have particularly good opportunity to receive German peace suggestions. Berlin political circles state that all these British maneuvers quite obviously are aiming at nothing else but to raise the sinking morale of the British people. They emphasize that Berlin has no knowledge whatsoever about the Vatican's share in such alleged peace feelers.

Less Enthusiasm Shown

STOCKHOLM, October 22.—Yesterday's newspapers in London showed considerable reserve in commenting on Britain's Bolshevist ally, whose position owing to the new German offensive has become considerably more precarious of late.

The keyword for this new attitude seems to have been given by Vernon Bartlett, M. P., who was recently in Moscow, representing the British Ministry of Information, in an article refuting the much talked about "unreserved admiration for the Soviet Union". He explained that the time had come for Englishmen to realize that the Soviet nation, though perhaps fighting for more than mere self preservation, nevertheless had ideals utterly different from those held by the British.

Mr. Bartlett demanded that a more realistic attitude be taken toward the Soviet Union. Much in the same tenor, the News Chronicle wrote yesterday:

"Before the outbreak of the Russo-German war many Britishers were wont to look down upon everything Russian, while the same people today express boundless admiration for everything Russian." The paper added that, whereas formerly the British public had been assured that the Soviet Russians were unskilled workmen in handling machines and that the Soviet front was bound to break down, Britain today practically embraces Stalin with printing ink. The paper declares that Britain should learn to build up relations with other nations on expert knowledge and truth.

Other London papers likewise underline the necessity of curbing the enthusiasm of workers who, prompted by Communist leaders, insisted on a British offensive on the western front.

The Times and the Daily Mail opine that, while the wish for an offensive on the western front was understandable, the people making such demands were unaware of certain preliminary conditions. The Daily Mail, in particular, turns down the assertion that Britain's war effort was less than that of Soviet Russia, recalling that there had been a time when Britain by herself had resisted Germany and kept her war production going.

FRENCH VOLUNTEERS HAPPY IN GERMANY

Morale of Those Undergoing Training to Fight Reds Said Magnificent

Transocean

PARIS, October 21.—"The morale of the French volunteers now undergoing training in Germany for fighting against Bolshevism, is magnificent. In their letters to us the volunteers unanimously state that they were accorded a most friendly reception by the German population", declared Colonel Gurvy, director of the recruitment bureau of the French volunteer legion, to a representative of Transocean in the course of an interview here yesterday.

"The French volunteers proudly reported that they were provided with completely new outfits, first class arms and fine horses", added the Colonel.

Many of the members of the French Volunteer Legion, stressed the Colonel, are married men. But they do not worry about their families whom they left behind in France, since they know that these are well cared for during their absence.

To Defend Manchou Empire

To uphold the tradition of Manchoukuo's mechanized corps, which played a brilliant role in the Battle of Nomonhan in 1939 and other battles, large and small, in that country was born the Manchoukuo Army Automobile School. The students are all Manchoukuoans, and their educational status and technical ability are by no means inferior to those of Japanese soldiers.

This fact is enough for them to fulfill their duty as co-defenders of Manchoukuo with the Japanese Army. In the above picture is shown the practice of armored motorcars in the plain near the East Mausoleum of the first Emperor Nurhachu of the defunct Manchu Dynasty in a suburb of Mukden.

CANADA SAYS FACTS ANSWER U.S. CHARGE

American Critics Say Dominion Hasn't Made Adequate Contribution to War

Canadians, starting their third year of war, prefer to let facts speak for themselves in answer to charges by certain spokesmen in the United States that the Dominion has not made an adequate contribution to the war, says an Ottawa report to the New York Herald Tribune. The story continues:

What are those facts? How do they answer the isolationist contentions that Canada's aid to Great Britain is strictly on a "cash on the barrelhead" basis; that Canada does not have conscription; that Canadian troops have not seen action?

"Your war effort is such that no country on this continent can throw stones at Canada," asserted Malcolm MacDonald, British High Commissioner to Canada, speaking recently at the 1941 Canadian Institute of Public Affairs. "One reason there is lack of appreciation of Canada's war effort is that the Canadian Army has not yet been engaged with the enemy. But it has been assigned one of the most important tasks in the whole war. Other empire units have done magnificent work engaging the enemy in other theaters of war, but unless Hitler can successfully invade Britain he cannot win. General McNaughton and the Canadians are defending one of the vital spots of Great Britain. If the Germans attempt to land the Canadians will be a very large part of the spearhead of resistance. They have got the post of honor in Britain."

Munitions Exports Jump

Canadians, according to a statement just issued by the Canadian Director of Public Information, will spend 40 per cent of their 1941-42 national income on the war. Canadian exports of war supplies to Britain in the 12 months ended March 31 jumped 45 per cent over those of the preceding year. Dominion exports to Britain in the current fiscal year are expected to reach a value of $1,500,000,000. In terms of American income and population, it is estimated, this would be equivalent to nearly $23,000,000,000 worth of goods.

Canadian supplies sent to Britain include foodstuffs, particularly wheat, bacon, eggs, cheese and canned goods; such raw materials as base metals and timber; war equipment, including machine guns, two-pounder guns, anti-aircraft-gun barrels, shells, small-arms ammunition, chemicals and explosives, universal carriers mechanized transport mine sweepers, corvettes, small boats and airplanes.

Is business done on a "cash on the barrelhead" basis? Here is the Canadians' own summary of these financial transactions:

"Canadians have provided Britain with about three-quarters of the Canadian dollars she has needed so far to purchase war supplies in Canada, and they will finance the bulk of Britain's expenditures in Canada in the coming months.

"In addition to British goods sent to Canada, Britain already has needed 1,000,000,000 Canadian dollars to cover her purchases in Canada. About a quarter of this sum Britain paid Canada in gold. It has cost Canada, in the United States more gold than this to enable her to fill her British orders, and there have been no gold shipments from Britain to Canada since December, 1940. The remaining $750,000,000 Canada has supplied herself.

"Canada provides Britain with some of the Canadian money she needs by repatriating Canadian securities held in Britain. This amounts to paying debts before they fall due. The Dominion supplies the rest by accumulating sterling balances—in effect lending Britain money. All this credit, like the money raised to spend on Canada's own war effort, must be provided by the Canadian people. During the present fiscal year, the total required for financial aid to Britain will be between $800,000,000 and $900,000,000."

Canada declared war on Germany on September 10, 1939, and nine months later, on June 10, 1940, the Dominion declared war on Italy.

U. S. for Comparison

More than 300,000 men are in the Canadian armed forces in active service. A reserve of 170,000 men, including men drafted for the duration of the war, is being trained for home defense. This makes a total at home and abroad of 470,000 men. Without considering the reserve army, Canadians estimate their active service forces, in terms of United States forces, in terms of United States population, are equivalent to 3,000,000 men.

Canada's naval expansion has been one of the interesting developments of the war. When the war began, the navy consisted of thirteen ships and a total personnel of about 3,600. Its strength at the end of the second year of war is more than 200 ships and more than 20,000 men. Canadians estimate that by next March the navy will have 400 ships and 27,000 men.

When the war began, the Dominion had a permanent army of about 4,500 men and a non-permanent active militia of about 55,000 or a total of 60,000. Canada's active army consists of more than 220,000 volunteers enlisted for service anywhere and as long as they are needed. Approximately 100,000 are now overseas.

Canada's reserve army is composed of single men and widowers without children between the ages of twenty-one and twenty-four. After four months of rigorous basic training, these draftees receive an opportunity to enlist for service anywhere. Those who prefer not to enlist are kept in uniform and sent to coastal-defense centers or other vital points in Canada. They are subject to service for the duration of the war.

Canadians are particularly proud of the Royal Canadian Air Force. This rapidly growing unit numbered more than 60,000 men, twelve times its pre-war number, as the second year drew to a close.

Inflation Averted

Industrial developments have reached a stage in Canada far beyond any previous output. Nearly every Canadian factory is producing for war purposes. The Canadian and British governments have authorized expenditures of more than $520,000,000 in Canada for constructing new plants and purchasing equipment and materials.

Inflation has been averted largely in Canada, despite this tremendous economic transition brought on by the war. The War-Time Prices and Trade Board has the power to control the price of every article sold in Canada. In every department of the government efforts are being made to cushion post-war economic impacts.

Canadians regard the recently established Joint Economic Committees set up by President Roosevelt and Prime Minister W. L. Mackenzie King as the most significant cooperative step yet taken by the United States and Canada. Canada's new price-control measure extends control co-ordination over both prices and supplies of materials.

Canadian farmers have not profited from this war as in the sky-rocket-price days of the World War. Ship shorages, due to sinkings in the prolonged Battle of the Atlantic, have resulted in curbing numerous exports.

RAID ON LENINGRAD BY STUKAS PICTURED

Planes Sweep Everything Before Them to Clear Way for Infantry

Transocean

BERLIN, October 16.—The devastating effect of the Stuka attacks on strong field fortifications outside of Leningrad is described in a propaganda company report by Dr. Kurt Honolna. It says:

Twice or three times a day the Stukas unload their destructive cargo of bombs over the field fortifications in the Leningrad area, make breaches in the enemy front and open the way for our ground troops. The huge map in our headquarters, where the course of the front is traced anew every day, is the best barometer of our successes. How often did we experience that enemy territory, which we were still bombing yesterday, was today already on this side of the progressing black string indicating the course of our front-line. They had been made ready for assault by our planes and were then taken by our ground forces.

Crater after crater. Today again, in some distance, clouds of smoke are rising to the sky. A garland of burning villages surrounds Leningrad. Below, the brownish-green carpet of the Northern Russian forest and swamp landscape passes rapidly. The innumerable dugouts, trenches, bomb craters and field fortifications stand out in a yellow ochre against the brownish ground. They were to stop the German advance.

Today they are far behind the front. A light yellow zig-zag line, as if drawn with a ruler and connecting clumps of woods in a length of well over 20 kilometers, one of the well-known Soviet tank defense trenches, stands out in bold relief, and a few kilometers beyond, a second and third one. The Bolshevists have really spared no effort, and one realizes how bitter the fighting must have been before the deep tiers of defense lines could be taken.

Outlines of ruined villages, which are lying in the sun, dead and burnt out; no human being can be seen, altrough we are flying very low. The front appears dead and desolate. On the advance route only, which we are now passing, the war is alive. German motorized columns are rolling towards the enemy. The rest is dense smoke and fumes.

There is our target! It is a fairly extensive clearing between gigantic stretches of forest. Reconnaissance planes have observed that strong Bolshevist field fortifications are located here. We are darting across the brown heather. Anti-aircraft fire flashes on two sides.

Our machineguns send their tracer bullets into the mudholes and trenches of the Soviets, which have been excellently camouflaged, but can nevertheless be made out in the bright sunlight. Then we and the other machines of our squadron are dropping our bombs over the enemy positions, and the rest is fountains of earth and flaming smoke.

The anti-aircraft artillery is blazing away continuously, and flashes can likewise be seen on the warships in the Finnish Gulf. But where are the Soviet pursuit planes? Perhaps they are too busy, for we are not the only squadron, which today as yesterday, and tomorrow as today is storming against the wavering wall of defense of Leningrad.

Many Uses of Snake Venom Said Possible In Treatment of Diseases Thinks Doctor

I.N.S.

VENICE, Florida, October 4.—Twelve to 14 hundred physicians in this country now are using snake venom for treatment, Dr. Eugene Maier, who has done much to bring to the public's attention the value of venom in treating diseases, declares. "The use of venomin is still in the pioneering stage," the physician says, "but we think we're making progress."

Venomin is used in the treatment of epilepsy, arthritis and other diseases. It is now being used with notable success at Chattahoochee with epileptic patients at the Florida State Hospital for the Insane. Remarkable thing about the treatment is that the results are quick, and a cure is often effected within three or four months.

After cure, the epileptic does not necessarily have to continue taking the treatment, which is given through a hyperdermic needle.

Some of the venom used for medicinal purposes comes from Ross Allen's Reptile Institue at Silver Springs, Fla. A film on Allen's work with reptiles, following the venom from the time the snake is caught and "milked" until it is used for treatment was made this spring and will be released probably this fall.

"The first venom treatment," Dr. Maier said, "utilized bee venom. That was centuries ago. When I began the work, I thought what would be the use of starting out with bees? So I began experimenting with snake venom.

"Many people hesitate at the use of snake venom even now, because the reptiles are distasteful to them. I get empty vials back from physicians with the 'snake' crossed out of the 'snake venom' on the label. We still have a long way to go in the development of the use of venom for medical purposes," he adds.

ARMY ELEVEN WINS OVER COLUMBIA, 13-0

Navy Battles Harvard to 0-0 Tie Before 40,000 Football Fans

United Press

NEW YORK, October 26.—Army humbled Columbia 13 to 0 at West Point this afternoon while at Cambridge their arch rivals, Navy, battled Harvard to a 0-0 tie.

Twenty thousand fans in cool, crisp autumn weather watched Army in the first 18 plays of the first quarter drive 73 yards to a touchdown, with Hill scoring from the 16 yard line on the final play.

Army dominated Columbia during the entire second quarter. Neither team threatened in the third quarter, but in the final quarter Mazur intercepted a Columbia pass hurled by Governelli and raced 27 yards for the second touchdown.

Was 3-1 Favorite

Navy was a three to one favorite to trounce Harvard but 40,000 fans saw the Middies from Annapolis held scoreless in a game featured by terrific tackling by both sides.

Navy's Busik fumbled three times in the first quarter, one of which Harvard recovered on Navy's 18 yard stripe. The Crimson drove to Navy's two yard line but Navy held, won the ball on downs and Busik returned it to the 36, ending the Harvard threat.

In the second quarter the Navy trio of Werner, Wood and Clark, carried the ball to Harvard's 18 yard line, where the Annapolis boys were halted. Terrific tackling by both sides featured the game.

In the third quarter Harvard recovered another Busik fumble on Navy's 31 yard line. Harvard threatened twice after that but neither time could push over a score.

Navy dominated the fourth quarter but was unable to get within Harvard's 25 yard zone. In the closing minutes of play Navy desperately tried to score with a place kick, which Leonard booted from Harvard's 35 but Miller crashed through the Navy line and blocked it, ending Navy's scoring threat. The quarter ended seconds later.

Before a sell-out crowd of 85,753 wild eyed fans at Ann Arbor, Minnesota downed Michigan 7 to 0.

A brilliant sun and dry field made for east action as Minnesota drove to Michigan's 32 in the first quarter. Michigan then returned to Minnesota's 31 yard line from where Michigan's Kuzmas completed a pass to Ceithalm but Michigan was unable to push across a score.

Extra Point Is Won

In the second quarter Minnesota started a drive from Michigan's 48. Smith passed from the 43 yard mark to Frickey who scored two plays later and Garnaas converted for the extra point.

Two of Kuzma's passes later carried Michigan to Minnesota's five yard line where Westfall fumbled and Sweitger of Minnesota recovered, ending Michigan's threat.

Penalties and pass interceptions nullified two Michigan threats in the third quarter and in the fourth quarter Garnaas intercepted two of Kuzma's passes on Minnesota's four and 10 yard lines, respectively, to that two more Michigan drives.

PASSAGE IS SOUGHT ON P.I. DEFENSE BILL

Administration in U.S. Agrees On All-Out Effort to Back Measure

United Press

WASHINGTON, October 23.—Authoritative sources here yesterday said the Administration had agreed on an all-out effort to pass the Philippines Defense Bill in a form agreeable to the Commonwealth Government.

Wayne Coy, executive secretary to Paul V. McNutt, Federal Security Administrator, was sent to Capitol Hill to make the necessary contacts due to his familiarity with Philippines affairs and his closeness to the White House and the War Department, the latter of which reportedly asked Mr. Coy to intercede.

Joaquin Elizalde, Philippines Resident Commissioner in Washington, conferred with Mr. Coy. Members of the War Department were said to have asked more active Administration support of the bill.

It was learned that Harold Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, had agreed to back Mr. Elizalde's opposition to the bill unless the gold repeal amendment is withdrawn from the Senate version although it was not clear whether Mr. Ickes will be active.

Mr. Coy contacted Mr. Ickes, then Representative Leo Kocialkowski, Chairman of the House of Representatives Insular Affairs Committee, who arranged to convene the committee Thursday for a "chalk talk."

The "talk" would stress:

1. Philippines defense costs must be met immediately from whatever source.
2. It is advisable to use gold and and sugar authorizations of debatable validity in order to remove these from Treasury Department books.
3. Use of these authorizations will permit Filipinos to have a sense of sharing expenses.

Mr. Elizalde and Mr. Coy also were expected to confer with Senator Alva B. Adams, Democrat of Colorado, who introduced the gold repeal amendment, in an effort to meet his objections.

What of the Rialto?

Company will play at their own theater, the Takarazuka Gekijo near Hibiya Park, commencing October 31 until November 25. "Kenkun Koki" (Sadatsuna's Meritorious Deeds), an three-act play, will be used as the curtain raiser. It is by Issei Hisamatsu who produced it specially for a mass drama contest to be held in celebration of the 2,601st year of the Japanese Empire. Next comes "Kisetsu no Kakeashi" (The Run of Season) by Ichiro Miki, a Japanese ballet, consisting of ten scenes. Written by Eikichi Okada, a new grand revue called "Itaria no Hohoyemi" (Italian Smile) will be the highlight on the program, this being the first version of three plays dealing with the Three Axis Powers, Japan, Germany and Italy.

With an extra appearance of Takiko Mizunoe, all star dancers of the Shochiku Revue Troupe will take over the Kokusai Gekijo, Asakusa Park, from November 1 to stage "Shinseiki" (New Century). The play is divided into two parts, "Sujiku no Hanataba" (A Bouquet of Axis) and "Shori no Hato" (the Waves of Victory).

Starting November 1, the Yurakuza will house Roppa Furukawa and his company of actors and actresses who will present four plays, including one revival. They are "Musume no Heya" (Daughter's Room), "Asakusa no Kodomo" (Children in Asakusa), "Roppa Keiongaku" (Roppa and Light Music), and "Chonmage Butaicho" (A Squad-Leader with a Top-Knot).

In response to the playgoers' enthusiastic support, the current performance of the Dodo Gekidan at the Kokumin Shin Gekijo will be given until November 5, instead of November 3. "Chisana Senshi" (Young Fighting Heroes), a three-act modern drama by Hiroshi Miyatsu, is the feature offering.

Concluding the local appearance at the Shimbashi Embujo last Tuesday, Yaeko Mizutani, Masao Inouye and their followers proceeded to Osaka where they will play at the Kabukiza until November 25. Their Tokyo performance is scheduled to be given in December.

"Aiyenkyo" (Love and Hatred), a melodrama, which made a big attraction at the Meijiza this month, will be transferred to the Tokiwaza, Asakusa Park, where the players of the Warai no Okoku will play in concert with Denmei Suzuki and Yoko Higure from tomorrow. The bill also has three plays, namely, "Okusama Nikki" (Wife's Diary), "Aki no Daiyamondo Sho" (the Autumn Diamond Show), and "Yedokko Idaten" ("Flying" Yedo People). The Koen Gekijo, another theater in the same park, will also open tomorrow with Noboru Umezawa and his dramatic troupe playing. The program consists of three plays, of which "Kinno Urakaido" (Loyalists) is the feature.

Kenji Fujima has organized a dance society to restore the old Japanese dance, popularized by Senju Kirinami, a famed actor in the Genroku period. The actor's name was taken for the newly-established group, which will present the first performance at the auditorium of the Imperial Aeronautical Society building, Shiba, on December 15.

Eight dance programs are scheduled to be given in the capital over the week-end and next week. They are by Suzuko Kawakami at the Hibiya Public Hall Friday evening; Miyoe Fujikage at the same hall, Saturday night; Yoshisuke Wakayagi at the Gunjin Kaikan on November 3; Jurei Hanayagi at the Sanshi Kaikan on November 4; the Hanayagi Buyokai at the Hibiya Public Hall on November 5; Jushiro Hanayagi at the Gunjin Kaikan on November 6; Konami Ishii at the Nihon Seinenkan on November 8-9, and Taisuro Kawano at the Gunjin Kaikan on November 8.

Ichimatsu Ishida, popular vaudeville performer, has been signed by the Takarazuka Company for a special performance at the Toho Gekijo in Atami on November 1-4 and another engagement at the Toho Gekijo in Kofu on November 6-12.

U.S. Film Release In November Is 74

nese films, including "Kaigun Kushu Butai" (Naval Air Forces) and "Konin no Sekkohei" (Five Scouts), will be screened.

Taking advantage of the recently observed Home Front Strengthening Week, the publicity section of the Japan Motion Picture Company launched a campaign for collection of one-sen coins, which aggregated 1,988 pieces in number and which were donated to the Ministry of War. The campaign for the same purpose will be continued at the various theaters under the management of the same company.

Kinuyo Tanaka, Makoto Saburi, Masami Morikawa, three star players of the Ofuna studio of the Shochiku Motion Picture Company, who are now playing important roles in "Joi no Kiroku" (Diary of Woman Doctor), have gone to Ishikawa Prefecture to work on location under the direction of Hiroshi Shimizu. The story of the picture is based on the motif of villages without physicians.

After an interruption of some months, the foreign section of the Toho Eiga exported three domestic pictures to Hawaii recently. They are "Kekkon no Shotai" (True Character of Marriage), "Yukiko to Natsuyo" (Two Daughters), and "Togyo" (Fighting Fish).

The South Sea Motion Picture Association, which has been endeavoring to send Japanese films to French Indo-China, is now planning to dispatch a group of staff members to Bangkok, Hanoi and Saigon to strengthen its activities.

The Riken Eigasha has been requested by the Ministry of Agriculture and Forestry to produce a culture picture entitled "Yama to Mizu" (Mountain and Water), the production of which has been suspended due to the shortage of raw film. The first part of the shooting will begin in Nagano Prefecture shortly under the direction of Kenshi Shimomura. The location will be continued in Gifu and Kanagawa Prefectures.

The Toho Eiga dispatched a group of movie projectors to Hachijo and Miyake Islands early this week to make a circuit performance of motion pictures in various villages there, including Izumura, Nakanogomura, and Suyeyoshimura.

The Education Ministry has disapproved the following two films, which cannot be released before children under the age of 14. They are "Waga Ainoki" (Diary of My Love) by Tokyo Hassei and the revised version of It Happened One Night by Columbia.

Stimulated by the establishment of the wartime structure in the motion picture industry in Japan Proper, the motion picture producing companies in Chosen are now speeding up their merger plan. It is said that the production of dramatic films will be reduced to six each year while culture features will be limited to five in number and newsreels 12.

"Kokumin Gakko" (National School) is the title of a new culture picture produced by Japan Eigasha. The change and developments at the national schools after the enforcement of the new system at the former primary schools are vividly pictured.

The Daito Motion Picture Company has commenced preparations for filming a melodrama called "Yoake Fuji" (Mt. Fuji at Dawn), the story of which is written by Shiro Nakano.

Among culture features recently approved by the Education Ministry are "Seibihei" (Standing Army) by Dai Nippon Kyoyei, "Kikai Taiso" (Heavy Gymnastics) by Asahi, "Bokura no Tsubasa" (Our Wings) by Kyokuto, and "Kuchu Shashin Sokuryo" (Photographical Survey in the Air) by Riken.

PROTESTANTS IN GERMANY ASKED TO HELP FINLAND

Nazi Church Authorities Appeal For Aid to Rebuild Karelia

Transocean

BERLIN, October 26.—Protestant churches throughout Germany were appealed to by competent German church authorities to help the Finns in reconstructing Karelia.

A letter to this effect was sent by German Bishop Hecket of the Protestant Church in Germany to the General Synod of the Church of Finland at present meeting in Turku.

The letter reads in part: "Along with the recapture of Karelia, great tasks are awaiting the Finnish Church. In view of the traditional ties between the two churches of the reformation, I have appealed to all Protestant churches in Germany for mutual help in the reconstruction work at Karelia, and especially at Viborg."

"The beautiful Viborg Cathedral once built by German architects, which barbarians and church desecrators have destroyed, will be erected anew by a deed of common brotherly love and thus will become the internal and external sign of a mutual victorious fight," the letter adds.

Finnish Archbishop D. Kaila replied in a cordial message of thanks on behalf of the Finnish Synod.

Department of Agriculture Gets Supply From Plantations in Liberia

United Press.

NEW YORK, October 25.—Harvey Firestone, head of the rubber company which bears his name, yesterday presented to Dr. E. W. Brandes of the Department of Agriculture, over 1,000,000 rubber seeds.

The seeds were part of a shipment of over 2,000,000 seeds from Firestone Liberian plantations to experimental stations the United States has established in Brazil, Peru, Haiti, Costa Rica, Guatemala, Panama, Colombia and Ecuador.

The seeds originally were taken from Brazil to England and thence to Ceylon, Malaya, Sumatra, Indo-China and Liberia.

Firestone's trees are free from the leaf disease which killed most of the planting in South America.

Presents Plaque to Shrine

A ceremony of presenting a championship plaque, on which the names of those who won championships at the 11th Annual Meiji Shrine National Athletic Meet last year are inscribed, to the Meiji Shrine was held Thursday morning, the day previous to the opening of the 12th Meet. The custom of its presentation is observed each year. The plaque is made of alnite, 3.2 feet high and 4.4 feet wide, and will be put up at a corner of the shrine building. The picture shows Welfare Minister Chikahiko Koizumi going to attend the ceremony at the head of the procession of officials for this year's event.

THREE-DAY PROGRAM IS SET AT Y.C.A.C.

Six Events Scheduled, Starting Off With Lady Hockey Players

With Monday being a national holiday a full program of sports covering three successive days from Saturday has been planned for this weekend at the Yokohama Country and Athletic Club.

Six sports are included in the various athletic events, these being hockey, rugby, soccer, basketball, lawn bowls and tennis.

The club's lady hockey players will be the first to use the field this weekend, a practice being scheduled for 2 p.m. Saturday. An hour later the British Embassy eleven will play the Y.C. and A.C. first team in the initial men's match of the season. As the diplomats have some fine players, a close game is expected.

Lawn bowls enthusiasts are looking forward to the rink match between the ladies and the veterans which will get under way at 3 p.m. Saturday. No doubt a big majority will be hoping for a victory by the feminine four, but as all the veterans are top-notch players it would be a big upset if they did.

Veterans to Do Best

The veterans will certainly do their best to win as a defeat would result in their being badgered unmercifully at the annual lawn bowls dinner to be held in the clubhouse Saturday evening. The dinner will be an informal and mixed affair scheduled for 7 p.m. at which the winners of the various events in the club tournament will be presented with their prizes. All members and friends are welcome to attend, and reservations are to be made by either signing the list on the noticeboard or getting in touch with the club secretary as soon as possible.

Basketball will make its debut at the Y.C. and A.C. this season on Saturday when the "old timers" meet "the rest" on the club court at 5 p.m., and it will be another battle in which experience will be pitted against youth and speed.

The Y.C. and A.C. rugby team which has won all three games it has played this fall will meet the Waseda Kenchiku fifteen on Sunday with the kick-off set for 11 a.m.

Two soccer games will be played in the afternoon. The club seconds will play against St. Joseph's College at 2 p.m. while the club firsts are scheduled to oppose the Nihon University eleven at 3:15 p.m.

On Monday morning the St. Joseph's College soccer team will meet the school's old boys, and as many of the latter play for the Y.C. and A.C. firsts or seconds, it should prove a good match.

In the afternoon the Y.C. and A.C. rugby squad will have a game against the Senshu University Senmon-bu fifteen. The game is set for 3 p.m., and the home team's line-up will probably be the same as for the previous day's match, which is given below.

The tennis committee is urgently requesting competitors to play off all first round contests in the autumn tournament by Monday, and it is expected that many matches will be played over the long weekend.

Meiji, Hosei Elevens Will Clash Today At Korakuen Stadium

The elevens of Meiji and Hosei Universities will clash in a Kanto Intercollegiate Football League game today at the Korakuen stadium. Kick-off is 3 p.m. Labeled as the team of the year, the versatile Meiji club is expected to encounter little trouble in downing Hosei for its third straight victory. Meiji has piled up a total of 59 points against St. Paul's and Keio, while holding the opposition scoreless. Hosei has yet to score a win and have been routed by both Keio and Waseda. This game marks the half-way point of this season's League schedule.

BIG ECONOMIC LOSS OF REDS REVEALED

Nazis Have Taken Industrial Area 3 Times Larger Than Germany

Transocean

BERLIN, October 24.—Some interesting figures showing the great economic losses which the Soviet Union has suffered so far were announced yesterday by competent German quarters.

These figures show that German troops have not only occupied over 1,500,000 square kilometers of Soviet territory, an area three times as large as Germany itself, but they have also taken away from the Soviets the most important economic centers of the Soviet Union.

So far the Soviets have lost: 70 per cent of anthracite and lignite coal production, 85 per cent of iron production, 68 per cent of manganese ore production.

In addition, the Soviet Union has lost in its European section: 84 per cent of copper production, 50 per cent of tin production, 50 per cent of lead production, 95 per cent of nickel production, 75 per cent of bauxite production, 80 per cent of aluminum production, and 85 per cent of sulphur production.

By these tremendous losses the economic backbone of the Soviet Union has been broken and its economic power smashed, in the opinion of economic circles in Berlin. Neither by its own initiative nor by any foreign help can the Soviet Union ever hope to make up these huge losses, it was pointed out in Berlin.

GREEK PRIME MINISTER REPORTS ON TRAVELS

Complete Understanding of Situation of Greece Found in Central European Countries

Transocean

ATHENS, October 22.—The Greek Prime Minister, who recently returned from a journey to Germany and other Central European countries, declared to press representatives that everywhere he had found complete understanding for Greek questions and especially for the supplying of the country with foodstuffs. The competent authorities are fully prepared to contribute to the foodstuff supply of the Greek people, and this kind disposition had enabled the Minister to reach a prompt settlement of the most urgent of these questions, especially as regards the speedy delivery of wheat, solid and liquid fuel, and sugar.

Authoritative quarters had likewise shown a vivid interest in the future supplying of the country. Thus, on the basis of the clearing agreement, grain, seed grain, cattle and other vital materials are to be imported from neighboring countries by Greece. An intensification of home trade and industry is to be attained by the importation of machinery and trade goods.

The Minister gave expression to his hope that Greece would occupy the position in the new Europe which was due to her.

Public Morale of U.S. Bewildered, Confused

morale would rise gradually to a long approach toward unity.

Controversial Domestic Issues

But the war issue in such simple forms becomes involved with extremely controversial domestic issues. People come to think that use is made of the preparedness effort to advance domestic purposes of the New Deal. When help to Britain is before Congress and the country in the form of the lease-lend bill, critics point out that the bill gives great power to the President. At once people recall that increase of Presidential power has been a domestic issue for seven years. The domestic issue and the preparedness one become mingled. The people become confused.

A condition that confused our people, for which no one in America could have any responsibility, was the change in the Soviet relation to war. American emotion about the war had regarded both with hostility. Then Germany attacked Soviet Russia. By that the Soviets was aligned on the side America favored. The switch called on us to change our attitude toward the Soviet Union to welcome it, to foster its strength. The transformation called on us to practice a discrimination not easy for any national mass mind to achieve. We had to distinguish between the Russians as a people defending their homeland and, on the other hand, Communism as an ideology, with Joseph Stalin as a dictator. It was hardly likely that, in terms of national morale, we could achieve this discrimination within so short a period as the ten weeks or so since the status of Soviet Russia changed.

But complex though the whole war situation be, America cannot escape having a vital relation to it. That we should have a unified national morale about it is desperately desirable. Every one, especially those in places of official responsibility, should avoid steps that put unnecessary impediments in the way.

The Meiji University football team scored their third straight victory in their Kanto Inter-collegiate Football League campaign Friday afternoon with a 26 to 0 score over Hosei at the Korakuen stadium.

With second-stringers working throughout a greater period of time, the Surugadai team scored four touchdowns and made good on two conversions.

Yamahira crossed the goal line twice, while a touchdown apiece was scored by Kunimoto, and Motoyama. The conversions were kicked by Obana.

The Meiji shock troops lined up at the opening of the contest. Instead of the expected emphasis on attack, the game started as a bitter defensive struggle, with Meiji holding the edge in ground gaining but being unable to score.

Early in the second period a Meiji air offensive, sparked by Yamahira and a lashing ground attack paced by Shimogaki, Motoyama and Yamashita, reached the Hosei 14-yard line. Two slants at the line picked up five yards, then Yamahira circled his own right end to score standing up. Obana who had replaced Yamashita split the uprights on the conversation kick and Meiji lead, 7-0.

Meiji was back in Hosei territory a few minutes later. Yamahira on third down shot a pass to Kunimoto, who caught the ball with no one near him and raced over for the score. Obana again made good on his conversion place kick giving Meiji a 14 to 0 lead.

The next Meiji threat came shortly before the end of the half when Meiji recovered a Hosei fumble on Hosei's 25-yard line. Short quick passes and straight shots through the middle placed the ball on the 14. A backfield in motion penalty set Meiji back and on fourth down a pass in the end zone was wrecked.

With most of the regulars in the line-up Meiji started going places at the start of the third period. After a running attack bogged down on Hosei territory, quarterback Fukunaga passed a long one to Yamahira, who merely stepped over for the third Meiji touchdown. This time the conversion kick went wild and the score stood at 20 to 0.

At the start of the final period, Hosei finally pieced together a drive which brought them to Meiji's 32-yard line, the closest point they worked up to all afternoon. However, line plays and passes failed to click and Meiji took over on their 30.

Toward the latter part of the period, Meiji again turned on the power and with Motoyama, Yamashita and Yamahiro smashing the line they paraded to another touch down. Motoyama just missing scoring on a spinner over center to take the ball to the ½-yard line. On fourth down Motoyama this time dove over center for the score. A pass in the end zone for the extra point just missed connecting and Meiji increased the lead to 26 points.

TARBES, October 26.—Tristan Derème, famed French poet, died yesterday at the age of 53.

'Silent Heroes' Honored

An outstanding ceremony of honoring war horses, known as "silent warriors," was held in Tokyo Friday. The same function was conducted in various parts of this country on October 24, but it was postponed here to Friday, due to the air raid prevention drill. Since the outbreak of the China affair, this event has been held four times. About 150 horses mounted by soldiers and private equestrians attended the ceremony held at the Hibiya Park ground. After Shinto rites consoling the spirit of horses killed in war, a procession paraded through the streets.

ARMY MUST LEARN 'BLITZ' PRINCIPLES

U.S. War Department Tells High Command to Prepare For Any Combat

United Press

WASHINGTON, October 26.—The War Department recently told the army high command to take advantage of all lessons in "blitz" warfare abroad in training the American army to be ready "for combat under whatever conditions the defense of our country and its possessions may require," it was learned here yesterday.

The goal for an "all purpose" army was set forth in the annual departmental training directive dispatched to field force commanders, chiefs of the arms and services, corps area and departmental commanders.

The directive stressed the importance of coordinating all arms, including ground and air forces, into a "smooth-working and powerful combat force," one of the factors attributed by military experts to the success of the German war machine.

By U.P. Correspondent

SOMEWHERE IN LOUISIANA, with the Second Army moving south, October 23.—I rode in the world's most modern tank and saw what the United States army believes is its strongest single weapon and the answer to Germany's panzer division.

The army dressed me in the regular tank corps field uniform of olive drab coveralls and two-pound crash helmet, a lightly steel-plated football helmet.

I was assigned to occupy the seat of the 75-mm gunner, one of the crew of seven—commander, driver, radio operator, and four gunners—but I cannot reveal my exact position in the tank because that is a military secret.

The 30-ton tank, first of which rolled off the assembly lines less than three months ago, is to land warfare what the cruiser is on the seas. It is fast. Its radial aircooled airplane engine can take it across rough country at 25 miles an hour.

It carries one 75-mm, and one 37-mm gun, four 30-caliber machineguns and two portable sub-machineguns. Its armor plate can withstand the impact of a 75-mm shell from 1,000 yards.

The noise of the powerful motor and the clanking armament reverberate between the white interior walls of the tank with deafening intensity. My shouts to a crewman two feet away were lost in the roar. The commander communicates with the driver by telephone.

The air-cooling system of the engine pumps fresh air into the tank but still it was hot down below with the ports closed.

Into Open Field

We passed over a roadside ditch into an open field with hardly a bump and rumbled across a field in open formation toward a clump of trees, most of which were 10 inches in diameter.

We snapped the first tree like a match stick and I didn't even feel a jerk. The noise in the tank drowned out any sound of crashing timber. Witnessing the destruction was like watching a silent movie.

We went through that clump like a knife through cheese and over more deep ditches with never a falter.

The inside of the tank is padded in most spots but crew members said the padding didn't help much in really rough country.

"We sometimes come out of this thing feeling that the division colors should be black and blue instead of red, blue and gold," one said.

Several secret features make this tank the world's most modern but three that are not secret illustrate the efficiency of its design.

In battle all ports are closed and the commander and driver look out through a periscope. This removes the great danger of machinegun fire into the old-fashioned slits.

Another feature is the two-way radio with which the commander can keep in touch with other tanks, other battle units and headquarters within 60 miles.

Perhaps most important, however, is that the top is plated with armor as thick as that on the sides. Near Cambrai, France in June, 1940, after the great tank battle there, I saw piles of twisted scrap that had been French and British tanks. They had no armor plate on top and they had fallen easy prey to the dive-bombing stukas.

But as important as all the material improvements in the M-3 and the factor which officers say make their first armored division the answer to the German panzer division is the organization and training of the division personnel.

The division has its own infantry, artillery and engineer corps to support it. Each man, regardless of his unit, is equally skilled in operation of any of the division's other machines—medical corps personnel can drive tanks, signal men can fire antitank guns, engineers can handle artillery. All the 12,000 officers and men can fire any of the division's 19,013 guns ranging from pistols to 1550 mm howitzers.

The officers assert that this "highest form of combat team" is superior to the German panzer divisions because of its increased self-sufficiency. It is "faster on its feet," they say. In addition to the 381 tanks it has 759 armor-plated combat cars and there is a place somewhere in one of the 3,250 motor vehicles for every man. The division is now experimenting with self-propelled artillery for even greater efficiency.

GEKIDAN TODO PUTS ON 50TH STAGE-ACT

Tokyo Juvenile Drama Company Marks 14 Years of Successful Activity

Marking 14 years of successful activity in developing the art of the juvenile theater in Japan, the Gekidan Todo (Tokyo Juvenile Drama Company) is presenting its 50th stage production at the National New Theater, Tsukiji. "The Little Hero," is the title of the play which will be given daily at 6 p.m., till Wednesday, November 5, with matinee performances on Sundays and holidays, 1 p.m.

Hiroshi Miyazu, the founder and director of the group, who is widely known in Japan through his radio broadcasts of children's plays, has written and produced this drama in three acts. The play draws its dramatic conflicts from the very world of ideas of the children, as all of the plays presented by this company always have done. That they were deeply rooted in the sphere of infantile interests and have genuinely reflected this sphere in the actual performances, has always been the strongest side of the Gekidan Todo presentations.

Takashi, the Hero

The little hero of the play is Takashi, a young lad who is about to enter the middle school, when suddenly his father dies. Thus, young Takashi has to give up his ideas of receiving a higher education and accepts work in a factory.

There is nothing particularly unusual about this story as such; but the drama elaborates on the psychological reactions which this sad turn in the boy's life works on the development of his character. Takashi used to be the "enfant terrible" in the Sunday school to which he was sent by his mother, a Christian. It was just before Christmas, and the children in the Sunday school were preparing a stage play to be presented on Christmas Eve, when Takashi's father became fatally ill.

Takashi, who was to take the role of King Herod in the children's play thought of quitting school right away, but his mother insisted that he should remain with the other children to enjoy his "last" Christmas. Though he has made up his mind that after Christmas he will face the troubles of the world and become a useful member of his family, he joins his pals and his beloved teacher once more for a few brief days of happy childhood.

But amidst the last rehearsal, Takashi, who is the best player in the show, hears of a critical remarks made about him by the principal of the school. No wonder that such a mischievous child as Takashi should do a good job in playing the part of such a villain as Herod, the principal had said. Takashi is deeply hurt in his youthful pride and runs away once more—only to be called back by a young and understanding teacher who at last persuades him to stay and save the performance.

In the treatment of this story, Hiroshi Miyazu shows deep insight into the small psychological problems which often produce so great effects in the life of children. The dramatic conflict caused by the unthoughtful remark of the principal is developed and built up in a very convincing way.

Christianity Is Debated

Of much interest is the confrontation of this Japanese story with the background of a Christian Sunday school. The conclusion, which is reached, is that in their attitude toward Christianity, the Japanese today are mainly interested in the question as to whether Christian ideas are helpful in promoting the Japanese ideals of faithfulness toward family and nation. Probably this attitude, which is both critical and positive, reflects the actual views of the Japanese authorities and people alike.

Most enjoyable is the presentation of this drama by the young Todo players. Although a "serious" rift in the ranks of the company was recently played up in the news which resulted in the secession of a small group, the original staff has remained almost entirely intact.

The juvenile star players, Miss Kyoko Kugai, Miss Hideko Kawashima, Miss Eiko Sakurai, Hiroshi Kawai, and Tadashi Koizumi, whose natural and skilful impersonations have delighted audience in many performances of the past, are again filling the stage with their lively playing.

Young Tadashi Koizumi, in the title role, gives a very touching and impressive performance. In the adult roles, Toshiro Tanaka as the sympathetic young teacher of the Sunday school, and Sakae Tsuda as a cheery young fellow working in a factory, are as commendable as ever.

Also the artistic staff has retained its best leaders, centering around Hiroshi Miyazu. Keiichi Shibata has designed beautiful and very naturalistic stage settings, using the limited stage space of the Tsukiji theater with great skill.

Satsuo Katayanagi was successful in selecting suitable church hymns for the musical background, but some of them are rattled down without any expression by the vocal quartet backstage. Much fancy is seen in the pretty costumes by Misses Kazuko Takahashi and Setsuko Hosokawa.

For Solitude Enjoyers

I.N.S.

HOLLYWOOD, October 7.—Somebody ought to tell Greta Garbo, who likes to be alone, about George Montgomery, ex-cowboy whom 20th Century-Fox is making into a screen star. Montgomery has a 1444-acre ranch in Montana, so isolated that "even the coyotes get lonesome." The ex-cowboy said today he was going to turn the ranch into a retreat for stars who really want to "get away from it all." Only people who work in pictures will be accepted as guests. The idea of turning the ranch into a hideaway for film folk was suggested by complaints that dude ranches in Arizona, Navada and southern California were overcrowded.

Preparing for Christmas

Preparations for a Christmas play to be staged by the children of a Japanese Sunday school are the center of action of "The Little Hero," a drama being presented now by the "Gekidan Todo" (Tokyo Juvenile Drama Company) at the National New Theater, Tsukiji. Emiko Kawashima and Tadashi Koizumi, juvenile stars of the company, are seen getting ready for their entrance in the "play within the play."

MUSIC NOTES

Piano events are much in the foreground of concert activities during the coming week, reminding of the fact that the piano is of all Western musical instruments the one on which Japanese musicians have attained to the highest degree of proficiency, in some exceptional cases comparing with the best Western standards.

OPM and OPA Take Move Because Supplies for Defense Dwindling

United Press

WASHINGTON, October 27.—Defense agencies announced yesterday that a waste paper collection campaign will begin soon to conserve old newspapers, magazines, boxes and wrappings for production of paper board needed for defense.

Officials of the OPM and Office of Price Administration said that waste paper supplies are dwindling because of huge demand for paper board boxes for packaging food and clothing for the army, parts of combat planes, munitions, rifles, chemicals and lend-lease materials. It is also required for shipments to Iceland, the Caribbean and other defense outposts.

The campaign will begin soon in New York City, Chicago, and Milwaukee under direction of the OPM, OPA and the waste paper consuming industries.

Later the campaign will be extended to Newark, Jersey City, Cleveland, Boston, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Washington, Philadelphia, Detroit, Baltimore, Pittsburgh, Buffalo, Cincinnati, Kansas City, Rochester, Toledo, Memphis, Birmingham, Dallas, San Antonio, Houston, Denver, Atlanta, Columbus, Akron, New Orleans, Indianapolis, Louisville and Providence.

The campaign will not extend beyond Denver because there is an ample waste paper supply on the Pacific coast. Charitable organizations will be asked to aid in the campaign.

In the meantime, the OPA's consumer division revealed that work on an "emergency American standard" refrigerator has been started by six refrigerator companies.

Companies working on the simplification program with the American Standards Association are Westinghouse, Norge, Nash-Kelvinator, General Electric, Servel and Philco.

Specifications for the purpose of simplifying washing machines, electric hand irons, finished sheets and other consumer goods are being worked out.

The OPM's civilian supply division suggested that printing be eliminated on bags made of burlap and other textiles so that they may be used again by civilian and defense industries. Consumers would return the bags or sell them to second hand dealers.

Associate OPM Director General Sidney Hillman announced that a plan has been proposed by rubber industry and labor advisory committees to assure that "equitable" rubber supplies are allocated to all plants owned by one company to prevent labor standards "from being undermined in any community." It was pointed out that one company owing many plants might close down certain facilities and concentrate production in a few areas.

The entire September production of pig iron at 4,500,000 tons was allocated by the Priorities Division to steel mills, iron foundries and other users for strictly defense purposes.

tist Sir Humphry Davy, who, in 1799, experimenting on "laughing gas" discovered its anaesthetic properties and described the effects it had on himself when inhaled with the view of relieving local pains. In 1818 Faraday showed that the inhalation of the vapor of ether produced similar anaesthetic effects. These observations remained scientific curiosities, until the first operation under ether was performed by the assistance of an American dental surgeon, whose name was William Morton.

He was born at Carlton, Massachusetts, in 1819, and studied dentistry at the Baltimore College of Dental Surgery. In 1844, he opened an office in Boston, where he paid much attention to the improvement of artificial teeth. Due to the often repeated necessity to remove the roots of old teeth, he began to think about an opportunity to find a method in order to lessen the dreadful pains of this operation. It seemed to be necessary to search for some means of deadening any sensation. Thus, he made experiments for many years with various animals, and finally, he discovered that sulphuric ether was the long desired object of his studies. He employed the vapor of ether in private to secure general anaesthesia in a case of tooth-extraction with such success, that his office was soon crowded by a weekly increasing number of patients who made his reputation very famous.

But one can understand that the doctors of Boston were more than doubtful to believe his words. Nevertheless, he showed a marked courage in relation to the envious attitude of his critics and offered a public demonstration of his new discovery. In the presence of the authorities of Boston, before the eyes of hundreds of inquisitive people of all ranks of society, Morton administered very successfully in a case of amputation of a leg at the General Hospital of Massachusetts. He gave the convincing prove that his "secret" was powerful enough to be applied to all big and dangerous operations. Morton, who hoped to save the use of his discovery for himself, because he was right to wait for a good material result, was more than disappointed. One of the doctors, Charles T. Jackson, a Boston chemist, who already had made himself unconscious in the laboratory by inhaling sulphuric ether some years ago, started to make many difficulties and objections, which were detrimental to the glory of Morton.

Although he was the first to introduce the practice, which soon became general in America, Great Britain and on the Continent, Morton never benefitted financially from his discovery and died in the utmost poverty in New York city in 1868. The only triumph he had was the bestowing of doctor honoris causa by the Harvard University His monument is to be seen on Mount Auburn near Boston erected by the "grateful citizens" of that town, where he has experienced so many disappointments and sufferings, mockeries and meannesses. . . .

Mr. Koelsch's work of fiction, derived from the real life, belongs to that kind of book which we ought to read at least once a year. The reader will be touched by the novelty of the subject as well as by the imaginative power of the author.

TOKYO, MONDAY, NOV. 3, 1941

Emperor Meiji

This third day of November is observed as a national holiday, Meijisetsu, in reverence for the memory of the Emperor Meiji. Today, as always in the past, the minds of the Japanese people turn with a renewed sense of appreciation and with unwaning affection toward the shrine which is dedicated to the Ruler whose mind and personality stood out as a tower of strength and fountainhead of wisdom through that part of the history of the Empire which is a record of achievement and glory such as any people could be proud of.

The memory of the great Emperor is preeminently associated with the periods of national emergency and crisis through which this country had to go in the Meiji era. Of those periods of unusual difficulty and gravity there were two which had most to do with the shaping of the nation's destiny. One was the war with China in 1894-5 and the second was the war with Imperialist Russia in 1904-5. In either case Japan had to fight a country superior in manpower and weapons, and far surpassing in resources of materials.

Victory was achieved on both occasions against what appeared as overwhelming odds. Of Japan's successes in those wars many and convincing explanations have been given. But, in the last analysis, Japan won over China, as over Russia, because of the better qualities of her men. These superior qualities of men were seen in the perfect unity and the high resolve with which the nation faced the situation.

Today, a full generation after the demise of the Emperor Meiji, the Japanese nation faces what has been commonly termed a national crisis. Only they now prepare themselves against this situation as masters of the Western Pacific area and as leaders of that movement, the East Asia Co-Prosperity Sphere, which must bring a new light to the races to whom has long been denied the privilege of ordinary life by external pressure and who will now share common security and joy of living.

The position that the Japanese nation has taken imposes on itself tasks of huge responsibility and extreme difficulty. But it knows that its courage will be sustained by the sense of justice which will be its guide. It knows that the pain will be cleared by the light of the integrity of purpose which alone can command cooperation in the country as well as without. And as the nation scans the horizon today it is satisfied in fullness of knowledge that it now stands just as firmly knit and united as its forefathers were through their ordeals under the leadership of the great Emperor Meiji.

When Means Justified

War being hell, in words of General Sherman who was an authority, having introduced the scorched earth policy to the United States, it would seem that "everything goes." It might be understood that the end justifies the means. But encouraging to note is the fact that in most respects the European nations at war are observing such rules as fair treatment of prisoners and the non-use of poison gas. While Germany and England have gas-masks to protect themselves from any attack, and no doubt have stores of lethal or crippling gases to employ in retaliation, they have not used this weapon nor has Japan. In the matter of treatment of military prisoners accounts by Britons in Germany are most favorable, this despite the enormous burden it must be on the Reich to take care of so many British, French, Russian and other captives.

On the subject of the maxim "the end justifies the means," there is an interesting philosophical background. The truth of the major is that both the end and the means must be good and virtuous. If either is evil the whole is condemned. First use of the perverted maxim was against the early Christians who were charged with doing evil in order to obtain something good. Students point to the Bible, Rom., 3, where it says: " . . . And not rather let us do evil, that there may come goods?"

The Jesuits were accused of approving any evil means in order to attain their theological and practical ends and they have been refuting the charge ever since. In the year 1852 a German Jesuit, Father Roh, publicly offered 1,000 florins to anyone who could find proof of any such approval in any Jesuit writings. A similar offer was made in 1863 and still later in the United States. Nobody qualified. But in 1903 one man did try to adduce proof. He was Count Hoensbroech, himself an ex-Jesuit. While a member of the order he had publicly repudiated the existence of any such doctrine, but on resuming life as a layman he took the other course. He was challenged for proof by Father Dasbach, a member of the Reichstag. Thereupon the count offered excerpts from thirteen leading Jesuit theologians. It had been stipulated by Father Dasbach that the proof be submitted to a mixed jury of Protestant and Catholic university professors. The Protestants declined to serve. Count Hoensbroech sued Father Dasbach for the reward; the decision of the Supreme Court of Cologne on March 30, 1905 was that in no one of the citations could be found the maxim employed in the sense attributed to the Jesuits.

War is brutal, horrible and revolting, but it is to the credit of the Powers that they do use restraints and retain evidences of the better feelings despite the incitements to do savagely otherwise. Therein rests the hope that withholding of some means in war eventually will justify a perpetual peace on earth.

Rise of Living Costs In Australia Worried

BRISBANE, Queensland.—The steady rise of living costs in Australia, despite all efforts at stabilization by the official price-fixers, is giving the Government serious concern.

The difficulty is rendered the more acute through the prospects of labor shortage, which is already tending to send prices up. This shortage has been hastened by the intensified recruiting which has been in progress in Australia ever since the British reverses in Greece and North Africa—a fact that offers the best reply to those who talked of discouragement in the Dominions.

The shortage is affecting in particular farmers and pastoralists who, because of the large percentage of enlistments among field workers, are finding it extremely difficult to carry on normal operations.

There is also a shortage of labor in secondary industries, including those engaged in munition-making. To offset this shortage the Australian Government has introduced compulsory exemption of certain age groups, and also is energetically pushing forward with a nationwide plan for the training of youths as mechanics and machinists for war industries as well as for the Army and Air Force.

The introduction of women into industry and as farm workers is being advocated by many authorities, and employers are being asked to replace enlisted men with women and girls, particularly in the clerical professions.

Queensland, being Australia's biggest primary producinig State, is bearing the brunt of the labor shortage. In farming districts the dearth of manpower has become so acute that some farmers have had to ask available harvesters to work up to 65 hours a week, compared with the normal 44 or 48 hours. This added labor cost, together with the drop in primary exports caused by lack of shipping, is partly to blame, according to Government officials, for the steady rise in living costs.—Christian Science Monitor.

U.S. Arms Program

D.N.B.

According to a radio announcement from Boston Americans have established a production program which will shorten the time necessary to conquer Germany by at least seven years. One hundred billion dollars were put aside for armament purposes and further more it had been decided to close down all industries, not working for defense. Even the bicycle industry was to cease production and to specialize on tanks. When all this will have been done, Americans take it for certain that Germany will be overthrown in three instead of ten years.

The whole idea is so truly American that it ought to be made accessible to all those who like to enjoy a good laugh in these troubled times. It means nothing else than that victory can be bought with "cash" and that the individual American need not go beyond doing without a bicycle in order to crush Germany.

GERMAN AND ITALIAN INFLUENCES IN SOUTH AMERICA SPOTLIGHTED

People in Upper Classes, in Army Have Admiration Over Continued Nazi Military Victories

By CLARENCE H. HARING
Professor at Harvard University

Christian Science Monitor

People in the United States often ask themselves the questions: to what extent are Germans or Italians in South America, whether European or American-born, really Nazi or Fascist in sympathy; and what influence has their propaganda exerted upon the mass of the native citizens and upon sentiment in Government circles?

The reports received from journalists temporarily in that part of the world are often contradictory and confusing. We are given the impression, on the one hand, that the South American scene is completely dominated by German propaganda and influence; on the other, that the ideal of Pan-American unity and cooperation is accepted as a matter of course.

It may be stated as a generalization that everywhere in South America the mass of the people appear to sympathize with Britain and the democratic nations. To that extent they are everywhere friendly to the United States. They represent the democratic forces in these not always very democratic republics.

Impressed by Victories

It is among the upper, wealthier classes, and in the army that German influences or sympathies are more in evidence. They have an admiration for German thoroughness and efficiency, and they are impressed by continued German military victories; they know that their best markets have been in Europe and, other things being equal, should continue to be there; and many are inclined to favor a "strong" form of government, even totalitarian in philosophy, as a refuge against the rising tide of socialism and communism among the mass of the people.

That they might suffer the fate of the people of the smaller nations of Europe seems to them to be a remote contingency. Few appear to be conscious of the likelihood that they would have to accept whatever economic terms were offered to them by a totalitarian economy in Europe, terms which in their ultimate effect would involve political subserviency as well. That they should be inclined to a policy of strict neutrality in the event of a war between the United States and Germany is therefore almost inevitable.

Six or seven years ago probably the majority of German residents in South American countries were less than sympathetic with the Hitler regime at home. Today, the vast majority of German residents are pro-Nazi. Compulsion and the seduction of German military and political success have done their work. One receives the impression, however, that German propaganda on the West Coast, while by no means inactive, has been less obtrusive, more circumspect, than on the East. It certainly very often seems less apparent than that which emanates from Britain and the United States.

Anti-British Sentiment

The rising tide of nationalism, so apparent in the domestic politics of all the Latin-American nations, is also not without its influence in the orientation of foreign policy. It has chiefly revolved about the question of foreign capitalism in the national economy, and because of the preponderant role played by British investment in the past hundred years, it has in many places taken the form of a strong anti-British sentiment. On the other hand, a deep-seated patriotic nationalism may be an obstacle as well to the imperialistic advances of a Nazi Europe. It is also a circumstance to be kept constantly in view in the formulation of any policies by the United States regarding loans and investments in South American countries.

Perhaps the most profitable means of promoting and consolidating friendly relations with these southern nations is to make it possible for more and more of their citizens to visit the United States. It is a device employed successfully in the past by the governments of Germany and Italy. In each Latin-American country it is important to build up a substantial nucleus of engineers, public administrators, physical scientists, and leaders in other fields who have a first-hand knowledge and understanding of the United States and its ways.

Individuals from all walks of life should be included, for with few exceptions those who visit the United States return home enthusiastic for the country, its people, and its institutions. One dollar so spent may be insurance against much greater expenditure later on. As one young Argentine lawyer expressed it, a hundred scholarships offered to Argentina would create a hundred friends of the United States; it would be much cheaper than a single destroyer and much more effective.

Fares High

To this end more attention should long ago have been given to the increase of transportation facilities and the lowering of costs of travel. Now it is probably too late, for American participation, indirectly, in the European conflict and the ordeal of England, make any allotment of additional shipping to South America very unlikely for a long time to come. For a considerable period there has existed only a fortnightly passenger service on the west coast; the situation on the east coast is not much better, and the fares to New York seem inordinately high.

For most South Americans, whose income is reckoned in a very depreciated currency, costs make travel on American steamers virtually impossible. President Roosevelt has spoken much and often about the increase and improvement of inter-American communications; but the matter has not gone far beyond the stage of words. On each coast there is virtually a monopoly of passenger service by one company. The United States Marine Commission, curiously enough, does nothing about the situation except acquiesce in an increase of rates.

In view of the great handicaps to travel arising from the disparity between the dollar and South American currencies (except that of Venezuela), these matters call for serious consideration if South Americans are to be attracted to the United States. Good steamers of the tourist class—combination cargo and passenger vessels—are needed, such as formerly plied between the United States and Europe. The device of the tourist dollar, analogous to the system of reduced travel costs for foreigners formerly offered by Italy, might conceivably be tried.

In the ultimate analysis, however, the problem of present and future relations between the United States and the republics of South America is an economic one. So long as the outcome of the struggle in Europe is uncertain, they will do little or nothing which might prejudice their relations with a victorious Germany, with whom they must make terms in order to sell their huge surpluses of foodstuffs and raw materials and supply themselves with essential imports.

Natural Market

This is especially true of those countries which lack important non-competitive products as a basis of trade with the United States. For, as El Mercurio of Santiago, Chile, pointed out in an editorial of April 23, 1941 the natural market for South American commodities is Europe. For the moment, the United States, because of circumstances flowing from the war in Europe, is making great efforts to acquire South American products beyond its immediate needs, solely for the purpose of providing the exchange which will enable these countries to continue their importations of American manufactures. But this situation cannot continue indefinitely, for the United States will not permanently be in a position to fill the role of redistributor of foreign products which it, itself, produces.

These circumstances the South American republics well understand. To the extent that the United States is able to satisfy their economic necessities, they will be inclined to be cooperative in other respects. Any nation which assures them economic security will have popular sympathy and support. And given the notorious lukewarmness of the upper classes for democratic institutions as we understand them, until the issue in Europe is clearer than at present, the official attitude is likely to be one of neutrality.

The cause represented by the United States and its President would also be immensely strengthened among South Americans if an ideal could be presented to them which they would be willing to fight for. "Democracy" served as that ideal in 1917. It can no longer do so. Too many South Americans have been disillusioned by the results of the First World War, too many are distrustful of the objectives of the "democratic" leaders in Europe, too many of those who believe in democracy are disturbed by its shortcomings in practice in formerly democratic states on the Continent and in many parts of America today. The appeals to "democracy" by representatives of opinion in the United States have been too frequent and often too glib.

Not Practical Issue

Democracy does not prevail generally in South America, and in many countries, because of racial and other circumstances, it is not a practical issue. But there is a deep and widespread belief in these republics in the principles of individual liberty, freedom of religion, equality of race, and equality of nations large and small. These constitute the common American heritage which needs to be stressed on every occasion. And a more specific statement of postwar objectives by the leaders in Britain and the United States—a program for the redemption of western civilization, if you will—would immediately command the support of the United States' southern neighbors.

Vegetables in Holland

The large-scale growing of vegetables in Holland has not always been so perfectly controlled even in normal times, especially so since all the newer methods of preservation were regarded sceptically, and the growers were satisfied to sell the vegetables just as they were harvested. But now a change has come about. The first vegetable drier has been set up whereby a high grade product is insured according to the very latest process.

The new plant has been set up at Schipluiden, near Delft, and is run by the Central Bureau of the Dutch Market Gardening Association. Spoilage of vegetables, such as previously occurred very often when the harvests were overly-abundant and which was always condemned by far-sighted Dutchmen, has now been done away with, and every harvest can be utilized to its full extent for the benefit of the Dutch producer.

Cooperation

The court was silent except for the clear-cut tones of the defending counsel. Everyone hung on his words, and many thought he would easily win his case.

"And now, gentlemen of the jury," he began to wind up, "I ask you: Where could this prisoner have hidden the watch? Not in his pocket. The constable has already told you that the man was searched. Not in his shoes—the watch was too large. Then where was it hidden?"

"Please, Sir, I put it under my 'at," said the prisoner.—Tit-Bits.

Big Diamonds

The following information from a publication by the late Dr. Oliver C. Farrington, former curator of geology at Field Museum and an authority on gems, may be of interest to Alden Scott Boyer, who wrote concerning "the largest diamond in the world."

Neither of the diamonds mentioned by Mr. Boyer—the Kohinoor or the Hope—is the world's largest. By far the largest is the Cullinan, which weighed 3,106 metric carats when it was found in 1905 near Pretoria, South Africa. This is equivalent to one and one-third pounds. The dimensions of the diamond in inches were four by two and one half by one and one half. The diamond was presented to King Edward VII of Great Britain by the Assembly of the Transvaal colony in recognition of his grant of a constitution to that colony.

After arrival in London the giant diamond was cut owing to a defective spot in the center of the stone to provide two flawless gems which still are the two greatest known cut diamonds—one weighing 530 carats and the other 309 carats. From the remainder of the stone a number of other diamonds ranging from four to 94 carats were obtained. All remain among the jewels of the British crown.

The Kohinoor, although surpassed by several other diamonds in size, brilliancy and transparency, is perhaps the best known among English-speaking peoples because of its eventful history and the many legends connected with it. It may have been found as much as 4,000 or 5,000 years ago, but the first definite record is from the year 1304 A.D., when a rajah of Malwar surrendered it as part of the spoils of a battle in which he was defeated by another Indian prince. It was presented to Queen Victoria in 1849 with the annexation of the native Indian state of Punjab. As brought to London in 1851 it weighed 186 carats and was recut to 109 carats.

In comparison with these the Hope blue diamond to which Mr. Boyer refers is comparatively small—it weighs 45½ metric carats. It was owned by Henry Thomas Hope, London banker, in 1830. It was sold in 1906, again in 1909 and finally in 1911 to Edward B. McLean, of Washington, who recently died.

A large and famous diamond which was exhibited at the World's Columbian Exposition in 1893 is the Tiffany Yellow, a gem of 128½ metric carats, especially notable for its "fire".—Chicago Tribune.

Heat-Proof Steel

In modern mechanical science, the extent to which working materials can withstand the effects of heat is becoming more and more an important factor, especially in the case of articles manufactured from metal. Such materials, however, must at the same time lose none of their hardness. There is now being produced in Germany a steel alloy which requires only small quantities of the auxiliary metals.

It goes by the name of "thermax," and is an alloy of steel, chrome, manganese, and silica. It can stand a heat of 900 degrees Celsius (ca. 1650 degrees Fahrenheit) without undergoing any perceptible change in its mechanical structure or the appearance of its outer surfaces. This steel is not only impervious to the action of fire, but to that of heat generally, so that it can be used to advantage in the manufacture of boiler furnaces, incandescent burners, etc.

Malaria Most Infective Disease

The world's most prevalent infective disease is malaria, according to Dr. James T. Culbertson, assistant professor of bacteriology at Columbia University, in his recently published book "Immunity Against Animal Parasites." Few die of the disease because the body usually succeeds in bringing the infection under control and an immunity is acquired. The disease is much more serious in children, and they are more likely to become infected than adults. The disease is transmitted by mosquitoes.—N.Y. Herald Tribune.

ROMANTIC TALE TOLD OF OIL KINGS' FIGHT

Gulbenkian, Jilted by Girl for Deterding, Took Revenge on Britain in Iran

Note:—Prior to the final driving out of Germans and Italians from Iran by British pressure, there was much propaganda concerning the so-called "underground force" of Germans that was working against the British interests. As to the nature of this alleged underground force nothing was made known and the world is still left ignorant of what it was. The Chicago Tribune Press on August 26 released a report, reproduced below, which seems to form a vital part of this underground force, if there ever was such a force at all.-Ed.

New York, August 26.—When history comes to be written, oilmen here say the present war in Iran will be traced back to the hates engendered by one man's thwarted love for a woman, the former gay Russian, Lydia Pavlovna Koudoyaroff.

Her thwarted suitor is Galouste Sarkis Gulbenkian. Rated as a multi-millionaire whose wealth exceeds $60,000,000, Gulbenkian is the mystery man of the oil business who is said to have held the fate of Iran, or modern Persia, in the hollow of his hand.

He chose finally to play his cards against the British. And the reason he did can be found in a story which oilmen here know well and which goes back to Paris, in 1926, when Gulbenkian, an Armenian who had risen from rags to riches, met Lydia Koudoyaroff. He introduced her to his friend, Sir Henri Deterding, boss of the British controlled Royal Dutch Petroleum Co.

Lydia jilted the Armenian. She became the wife of Deterding.

Waged 10 Year War

The Armenian's fury knew no bounds. Armed with big holdings in the Mosul, Venezuelan and Persian consessions in which Shell was operating, Gulbenkian unleashed a 10 year guerrilla war against Deterding. After many reverses, the Armenian came out on top in October, 1936. His pressure alone virtually forced Deterding's retirement when the latter was politely asked to step down at a company directors' meeting.

Gulbenkian had succeeded by lighting political fuses in Iraq and the near east which always forced Deterding's representatives against the wall. But Deterding down, the smiling, bushy-browed Gulbenkian unleashed a policy of appeasing international oil magnates which expressed itself in lavish entertainment, and included Moscow, London, Berlin, and Paris.

He became a British citizen, with a house in London But he also bought a 100 room mansion in Paris, at 51 Avenue d'Jena, where 32 servants helped pour tons of caviar and rivers of champagne down the throats of hundreds of guests.

Entertained Europe

He sent his wife, Nevarte, on tours to Russia Spain and Italy, armed with servants and cash, and from which she returned to tell her friends—with charming naivete: "You know, I'm just a private citizen—I don't know why Government officials make so much of me."

Paris laughed—and winked. His guests knew that among his many investments was a large block of shares in the German Reichsbank. Furthermore, through his influence with the shah of Iran, and his holdings in the Anglo-Iranian Oil company, Gulbenkian obtained diplomatic status as commercial counselor of the Iranian legation in Paris. This, despite the fact that he was born in Armenia and had become a British citizen.

When the Germans invaded Paris, he fled in a Rolls-Royce—only to receive word in a few days that his house was undisturbed. Forthwith, he was elevated to the post of envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the Persian shah in Vichy.

Worked Against Britain

And in Vichy the Gulbenkian household, now emblazoned in full diplomatic glory, resumed their Parisian hospitality which the new scarcity of food made even more popular—Veuve Clicquet champagne, 1921; dinner at 8 p.m.; a cold buffet at midnight; sausages and beer at 2 a.m., and breakfast at 6 a.m.

From this perch at Vichy, Gulbenkian's dormat hatred of Sir Henri Deterding and the English, and his vast knowledge of the near east peoples, are reported to have been spliced together neatly for the axis cause. It was Gulbenkian who directed the influx of German tourists into Iran, who directed the shah not to capitulate to the British demands.

And—the oilmen here say—it is to the 75 year old Armenian born Gulbenkian that the British referred yesterday as the "underground force" which they can no longer tolerate.

LARGE SCALE TRIAL SCHEDULED AT RIOM

Court Documents Cover 100,000 Pages—Longest on Record

Transocean

BRUSSELS, October 26.—The indictment prepared for the Riom trial of persons responsible for the defeat of France is one of the lengthiest documents ever to be read before a French Court, since it covers about 100,000 pages.

The special Tribunal of Riom will hold its first session on January 1, 1942, according to the special Vichy correspondent of the Soir.

Since more than 650 witnesses have been summoned to testify and in view of the fact that it is hardly possible to hear more than five witnesses in the course of one of four weekly sessions, the trial of those responsible for the collapse of France will presumably not be concluded before the spring of next year.

Parents Seek Intellectual Stimulation In San Jose . . . And Find It's Fun

By Karl Detzer

The history class wore hiking boots. Its 29 members carried maps, notebooks and cameras. Their ages ranged from 22 to 55—among them a grandmother, a retired rancher, a studious little clerk, and two chic young married women.

Their schoolroom was an overland bus from which for 500 miles they would study California's history. They were excited as they rolled eastward across sunny Santa Clara Valley. They were still excited five days later when they returned to San Jose.

They had found history everywhere—smelled it, touched it—on the camp sites of early explorers, in old Spanish missions and gold-rush ghost towns, deep in hot Death Valley, high in the snow of the Sierras.

They had absorbed some economics, too, a little geology, geography, botany. Engineers at Boulder Dam had given them a lesson in irrigation and flood control; park rangers had discussed soils and plants.

A vacation trip? Decidedly not! This lively tour was a regular feature in the adult education department of San Jose's public schools. The 29 men and women shared expenses, after paying $2 each—or $2 for man and wife—for the classroom course lasting all winter.

Experts call San Jose's adult education program the finest in America. More than one third of all the pupils in San Jose's schools are adults. Last year 7,100 grownups, one out of every six in town, took at least one course. In classrooms, gymnasiums, auditoriums, in Mexican shacks and on the highroad, timid immigrants as well as members of California's first families pursued knowledge in a hundred fields. Adult education in San Jose is no stepchild. It is an independent department, under the board of education, with five full-time and 100 part-time teachers. It isn't expensive; it costs the state about $7 per student, while the city supplies quarters.

The man responsible for this remarkable system is Director of Education David L. MacKaye, who before he became an educator was a soldier and then newspaperman. MacKaye and his assistants have brushed the pedagogic trappings from education and made the lessons exciting. They avoid school terminology. There are no "teachers" but "group leaders"; they operate out of 14 "centers," not "schools." Their slogan is, "It's fun to be intelligent."

Out of long experiment have grown three types of courses. The first, striving for educational democracy, is planned to help people of the 30 foreign nationalities who work in orchards, canneries, and other local industries. This starts with lessons in English—but English includes many other things.

The school goes to the foreigner, does not wait for the foreigner to come to it. Two-hours English classes meet twice weekly in strategically chosen neighborhoods. Pedro and Tony enroll to learn to read. Before long they find themselves hard at work in some ambitious sub-group, studying citizenship, preparing for naturalization, discovering the history of their adopted land. Last year 600 aliens became American citizens after schooling in the adult center.

Other groups meet in homes. Ten visiting public school teachers keep regular class schedules in Italian, Mexican, Portuguese and Jugoslav kitchens. Here little groups of beaming women, in best dresses, babies in their laps, have fun learning English.

"This is a fly," they are taught to read. "The fly carries sickness. We must keep the fly out of the kitchen."

Thus an English lesson becomes a lesson in hygiene. If young Jose or Marie is naughty, the teacher shows the harried mother by example how to handle the disciplinary problem. If babies are sickly, here's another job.

"I don't have a single family feeding its babies coffee in nursing bottles any more!" one grammar expert reported recently.

The San Jose school board last year leased for $5 a month a miserable shack in a Mexican section and sent a skilled woman worker to live in it, to repair it with small funds and great ingenuity, to put up screens, to make the outdoor toilet sanitary, to plant flowers and grass.

Neighbor women crowded around to admire results and went home to bully their husbands into copying them. Now after 12 months, all toilets in the neighborhood are sanitary and 29 of the 30 families sleep in beds instead of on the flood.

In the adult division's second group are men and women wanting to better themselves economically—workers who didn't have the chance for proper schooling. They dig enthusiastically into such diverse subjects as plumbing, traffic safety, retail merchandising, printing, cooking, and air conditioning. Most of them soon ask for some non-commercial subject, too, that touches their social and civic life. When that happens MacKaye feels that he is succeeding.

"We're not running an old-fashioned night school," he insists.

In the third group are men and women from the top of the social ladder, the professions, and business. They return to school to appease an intelligent curiosity. They study modern books, social orientation, family relations, or take courses in art, music, history, politics, and the sciences. These classes are not for dilettantes. Professors from the University of California, Stanford University, and nearby colleges come to San Jose to instruct them, with the help of local leaders.

There is a long waiting list for a course on "The Well-Dressed Woman," under one of the best-dressed matrons in town who happens also to be a psychologist. Here 30 or 40 women, from dowagers to young stenographers, offer themselves as guinea pigs, each taking the platfrom while the others criticize her clothes, accessories, makeup and hair.

Most novel is a new course expected to attract hundreds of members. A room has been equipped with phonograph and records. No one speaks. Only good music, in harmonious surroundings, and people learning again how to listen.

Popular also are astronomy lessons by a man from Lick Observatory. For the partly deaf there are classes in lip-reading, and radio-ear equipment too. Bakery and milk-wagon drivers seek instruction in sales psychology; small merchants learn how to conduct their businesses systematically. Other men and women study playwriting, producing their own plays, with stage sets designed by students in the art classes.

"This is not 'deficiency education,'" MacKaye points out. "These people are getting intellectual stimulation because they find it fun."

RIDDLED BRITISH PLANE ARRIVES IN HONOLULU

Consolidated B-24 Bomber With 4 Americans on World Flight

United Press

HONOLULU, October 26.—A British operated Consolidated B-24 bomber arrived at Hickam Field yesterday on a round-the-world flight, carrying four American and eight British and Australian fliers, it was learned yesterday.

It was understood that the itinerary of the flight comprised Mitchell Field, Long Island, Greenland, Iceland, Britain, Palestine, Egypt, India, Australia, the Philippines, Russia, Alaska, Wake, Midway, and Hawaii. The purpose of the trip was not known.

The bomber was said to have approximately 30 bullet holes as mementos of five brushes with enemy planes during the flight.

The plane was originally scheduled to leave Hickam Field at 4 p.m. yesterday but was delayed, probably overnight.

AUSTRALIAN WOMEN BID FOR MIDDLE EAST WORK

Will Relieve Men Attached to Hospitals—Others Likely To Malaya

Reuters.

MELBOURNE, October 24.—An announcement that 800 women of voluntary aid detachments are soon going to the Middle East to release men attached to hospitals and office staffs for other duties has been followed by forecasts that hundreds of Australian women are likely to go to Malaya and the Middle East, where living and working conditions are similar to those of nurses.

The inspector-general of the army medical services, Major-General Downes, after a tour of Australian Imperial forces abroad, recommended the dispatch of more women, which may influence the Labor Government to reverse the policy of the previous Government which was opposed to sending large numbers of women workers to oversea theaters of war. The matter is being discussed as soon as possible with the Australian Red Cross Society and the Military Board.

ENGLAND ESTABLISHES NEW WASHINGTON POST

Political, Economic and Sociological Adviser Named to British Embassy

Reuters

LONDON, October 24.—The Government has decided to create a new post at the British Embassy in Washington. It is to appoint a political, economic and sociological adviser, and has appointed Professor R. H. Tawney to be the first holder.

It will be Professor Tawney's duty to interpret to the people of the United States the political and economic trends and developments in Britain during wartime.

Professor Tawney is now in the United States. He left this country some time ago to undertake a short lecture tour before taking up his new position. It is expected that he will be engaged in his new duties for at least six months, and when he has planned the lines on which the post can be permanently maintained a fresh appointment will be made.

WASHINGTON, October 24.—Thirty pilots and mechanics of the Chinese Air Force have arrived in the United States from Chungking for training, Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson announced at his press conference yesterday. Also six pilots of the British Royal Air Force have arrived in the United States. They will exchange experiences and data with American aviators, Secretary Stimson confirmed.

'Tovarich' (!!)

LONDON, September 3.—Mrs. Winston Churchill, attending a London exhibition of Soviet life today as one manifestation of the new British-Russian friendship, today asked several questions of a doorman who looked like a Russian. The doorman, obliging, but not recognizing the wife of the Prime Minister, addressed her as "Tovarich" (comrade). The doorman was an Irishman named Shaughan.

ANTIPODEANS HELP IN WAR INVENTIONS

New Zealanders, Australians Produce Methods and Devices for Conflict

Inventiveness of Australians and New Zealanders, now turned from peacetime purposes to the creation of devices of use in the war, says a Wellington, N.Z., report to The Christian Science Monitor.

One example of this was the appointment of Prof. T. H. Laby, Dean of the Faculty of Science at the University of Melbourne, as chairman of a board which will co-ordinate work on optical instruments now being made for war. A first task of the board has been the investigation of problems connected with telescopic sights for anti-tank guns.

Australian savants are also being mobilized to help push ahead the Federal Government's big plan to manufacture explosives, and in New Zealand experts drawn from the universities are doing the same work.

In the field of war inventions the position is not so clear. Australians, an ingenious and adaptable people, have not forgotten that one of the originators of the tank was a countryman of theirs, and they see the possibility of development of a new weapon, or at least of a new method of use for an existing weapon before the war is over.

New Methods of Defense

Consequently there has been considerable attention given to new devices in war, in the hope that a fresh and effective device can be discovered.

In this field the favorite subject, understandably, has been methods of increasing the effectiveness of Britain's defenses against the Luftwaffe.

New Zealand is already reported to have made one major contribution to the air strength of Britain, a new and simple method of training airmen in bombing, but details remain undisclosed.

Earlier in the war the Australian War Minister described the ingenuity disclosed in letters to Army headquarters on war weapons and devices as "almost incredible." At that time letters were reaching the High Command at the rate of 500 weekly, and being sent on to the Inventions Board. Every letter was examined and every one which continued the germ of an idea was noted by experts in various army branches.

One of the suggestions made here long before the Nazi invasion rehearsal last September was the burning of infammable oil on the surface of the English Channel to foil Nazi attackers, a device which the Netherlands sources widely reported was actually adopted.

Electrical Devices

Much attention has been devoted to possiblities of electricity in meeting tank attacks. Wires trailed overhead, wires hidden at ground level, and streams of highly electrified water played on the tanks from hoses have been some of the ways in which Australians have proposed to dispose of the tank crews of the Nazi panzer divisions. Revealing this, the High Command pointed out that all these suggestions had the basic weakness that the current would be earthed at once through the metal tracks of the tanks and the crews would be unharmed.

One device which is given much attention is that which is mentioned in Charles Morgan's play "The Flashing Stream"—a robot airplane which would be sent aloft to hunt enemy raiding planes and destroy them. Guns which would outrange the Big Berthas of the present war, many improvements on existing warplanes and new versions of airplane engines are also popular. Some Australians ask as much as a half million dollars for their plans.

In New Zealand, the Defense Minister W. Frederick Jones, recently revealed, the inventions board has been operating since the outbreak of war. Technical officers of Army, Navy, and Air Force cooperate in dealing with all suggestions received. Every suggestion, no matter how fantastic it may appear, gets serious attention, and if a plan appears practicable steps are taken at once to put it into operation.

Only a small number of the total, were usable, the Minister said. Many inventions were sound enough, but had been anticipated by similar or more effective devices already in use. Others covered obsolete devices which could not be adapted to modern weapons. Some inventions, while not suitable in themselves, contained ideas which were handed over for development by technical officers.

Virtually every suggestion made had been offered free as a contribution to the national war drive.

FLOOD TROUBLES BRING THREATS OF SECESSION

Oklahoma Towns May Move Over to Arkansas Unless New Road Is Built

I.N.S.

GROVE, Oklahoma, October 9.—This northeastern Oklahoma community, virtually isolated from the rest of the state by the rising lake of Grand River Dam, is threatening to "secede" from Oklahoma and become a part of Arkansas—if the state highway commission does not build new roads soon.

Grove is cut off even from Jay, the Delaware county seat, and has access to the outside world only through Arkansas and Missouri.

Other northeastern Oklahomans are clamoring for action also. The people of Ottawa and Craig counties, as well as those in Delaware county are angered at being cut off from Tulsa, Oklahoma City and the other large communities.

U.S. Highway 59 is inundated at two points, U.S. 60 is almost ready to go under water, portions of State Highway 10 are flooded and a half-dozen important farm-to-market roads are now part of the lake bottom.

Gov. Leon C. Phillips declared martial law last spring in a fruitless effort to halt construction of the $22,750,000 hydro-electric project until road problems were solved

FIVE GAMES PLAYED AT Y.C.A.C. GROUNDS

Club Hockey Players Lose to British Embassy Team, 4 to 2

Favored with fine weather over the long weekend, members of the Yokohama Country and Athletic Club were able to run off a full three-day program of sports which included hockey, soccer, rugby, lawn bowls and tennis matches at the club grounds.

On Saturday afternoon the Y.C. and A.C. hockey players had to bow to the British Embassy team, 4 to 2, in a hard fought contest. Both sides were one man short, and some of the club's first string regulars were in the diplomats' line-up.

The club team started off well, Lord netting in 10 minutes, but Lloyd equalized soon after. The Y.C. and A.C. forged to the fore again before the interval when Russell sent home a good drive.

No Home Team Reply

In the second half the Embassy squad made three goals without a reply from the home team. Biggs, Stark and Lloyd were the goal getters.

The diplomats' defense was strong and the losers' front line was kept well in check most of the time. On the second half especially, the Y.C. and A.C. backs were hard pressed, and but for Harriss's fine goaltending the score would have been considerably higher.

Ballantyne played a splendid game at center-half for the winners, while the rest of his squad did well. Bond was effective at fullback for the losers.

Professor H. J. Bird and S. E. Lord refereed the match.

The line-ups follow:

British Embassy: T. W. Eckersley, Major K. S. Himatsinhji, F. H. Moysey, B. Kukie, A. H. Ballantyne (captain), Major E. V. Thomas, M. J. K. Stark, J. O. Lloyd, E. T. Biggs and H. C. Hainworth.

Y.C. and A.C.: F. R. Harriss, F. J. Bond, M. Parsram, C. Heseltine, E. Eastlake, R. Rau, F. J. Wilson, M. L. Russell, P. H. Lord (captain) and G. E. Beatty.

Veterans Beat Ladies

In the lawn bowls match Saturday afternoon the veterans had a hard fight in beating the ladies' four, 19 to 17. The men trailed for a considerable period but managed to gain the lead near the end and hold it.

Playing for the ladies' team were Mrs. J. Koch, Mrs. M. L. Russell, Mrs. J. O. Lloyd and Miss W. Dunning (skip), while the veterans comprised E. Dentici, C. Heseltine, K. F. Wiersum and W. A. Tomlinson (skip).

The annual lawn bowls dinner in the clubhouse Saturday evening was a big success, about seventy members attending. The affair, which was a mixed function for the first time, was presided over by W. A. Tomlinson, the lawn bowls captain.

During the dinner the prizes for the tournament were presented by Miss W. Dunning, the ladies' captain, C. Heseltine was chosen captain of lawn bowls for next year, and Miss Dunning was re-elected ladies' captain. A hearty vote of thanks for making the past season the record success was tendered Miss Dunning and Mr. Tomlinson, and the lawn bowls committee.

Rugby Team Wins Again

On Sunday morning the Y.C. and A.C. rugby team won its fourth consecutive victory in as many games this season, defeating the Waseda Kenchiku fifteen by 38 to 5. As usual, the winners were short-handed, this time by two men.

The winners scored first, making a converted try, but the students equalied not long after. However, before the interval the clubbers pushed over another try, and a beautiful kick by Planas from a hard angle made the count 10 to 5.

In the second half the winners dominated the play, making six more tries, five of which Planas sent between the uprights. The students fought hard but could not score in this period.

The club forwards played well again, with Weiss and Weidenmann showing up particularly well. The backs defended strongly, and Planas got away some fine kicks.

P.H. Lord did the refeering.

Playing for the Y.C. and A.C. were J. J. Planas, M. L. Russell, M. Jalenques, E. Eastlake, M. J. K. Stark, F. R. Harriss (captain), W. Salter, E. Salter, M. Pestalozzi, G. Agajan, A. A. Weiss, M. Weidenmann and L. A. M. Frank.

Soccer Teams Unbeaten

Both club soccer teams upheld their unbeaten and untied records Sunday afternoon, the seconds downing the Yokohama Third Middle School eleven by 5 to 3 and the firsts blanking the Nihon University squad by 3 to 0. Each squad now has three victories to its credit.

The seconds, playing two short for much of the first half, received a shock when the students obtained a 2 to 0 advantage, but Rau reduced the deficit to one when he headed in Agajan's pass from the wing before the interval.

When play was resumed the home team presented a full side, obtaining the services of Planas and Russell of the first team. Rau got his second point shortly to equalize, but the students obtained a third goal to regain the lead five minutes later. The clubbers pressed hard and Planas cut in from the wing to send in a fine shot.

The winners gained the lead for the first time after 20 minutes of the second half, one of the school backs sending the ball into his own goal in trying to clear. Beatty got the last goal shortly before the final whistle.

Dixon, the captain, played a hard and constructive game at center-half, and F. da Silva made some good saves in the second half in his debut as a goalkeeper.

The Y.C. and A.C. line-up included F. J. da Silva, E. Eymard, J. Fernandes, W. Salter, J. A. Dixon (captain), C. Heseltine, R. Rau, E. L. Gordes, G. E. Beatty, G. Agajan, J. J. Planas and M. L. Russell.

The club's first soccer team had a decided edge over the Nihon University squad, and but for the fine goaltending of their custodian the score would have been considerably higher.

Frank scored the first goal after 20 minutes when his lobbing shot beat the goalie. Wendbladh netted five minutes later from close in, and the score remained 2 to 0 at the interval. Makepeace made the third point shortly after the second half got under way to complete the scoring.

Captain A. G. Stevens put in a hard afternoon's work, refereeing both games most competently.

Playing for the Y.C. and A.C. were F. R. Harriss, H. Fernandes, E. Eymard, M. B. de Miranda, H. Schoene (acting captain), L. A. M. Frank, D. Vorobiov, G. W. Makepeace, J. J. Planas, U. F. Wendbladh and W. H. Blamey.

Old Boys Beat S.J.C.

On Monday morning the St. Joseph's College old boys soccer team defeated their school's eleven by 6 to 2 on the Y.C. and A.C. grounds. The students held a 1 to 0 lead at the halfway mark but could not stem the old boys' attack after the interval.

Kranz opened the scoring when he sent the ball into the cords on a fine effort. The former students equalized soon after halftime, Blamey finding the net. Vorobiov's shot put the O.B. ahead for the first time and Planas' drive increased the margin to two soon after.

The students rallied at this stage and N. Petroff cut their deficit to one, the score being 3 to 2. However, Nishigori, Agajan and Planas obtained a goal apiece after this to give the old boys a victory by a comfortable margin.

H. Gerard, one of the school teachers, was the arbiter.

The line-ups follow:

Old Boys: J. J. Planas, H. Fernandes, K. Goto, E. Janson, H. Schoene, H. Yoshida, W. H. Blamey S. Petroff, J. Nishigori, G. Agajan and D. Vorobiov.

S. J. C.: A. Sikos, J. Gomes, K. Tiskin, J. Lerner, F. Planas, A. Janson, B. Martinella, M. Nazir, J. Kranz, N. Petroff and H. da Silva.

The rugby game scheduled for Monday afternoon between the Y.C. and A.C. and the Senshu University Kanmon-bu fifteen did not take place as the students failed to turn up. The intra-club basketball game between the "old timers" and "the rest" which was set for Sunday afternoon was postponed a week on account of the heavy week-end schedule.

OSLO JOURNAL SCORES ATTITUDE OF SWEDEN

Says Swedish Press Supporting Group Who Deserted Norway

Transocean

OSLO, October 24.—Sharp criticism of the attitude of Swedish newspapers and of the Swedish authorities was voiced by the Norwegian newspaper Aftonposten today.

"Swedish newspapers continue to heep insults on Norway.

"The Swedish press continues to support the clique of Norwegian emigrants who deserted Norway and are trying to destroy that which we are building up.

"No democratic phrases can gloss over the fact that the connivance of the Swedish Government in this attitude is a gross insult. Though we here in Norway ought not to be duly perturbed as in the end this attitude of Sweden will fall back on the Swedes.

"On the other hand, as Sweden's immediate neighbors, we cannot look on indifferently when the Swedish Government thinks it can maintain within the borders of Sweden hotbeds of communism.

"Young Europe has been sacrificing to much blood to rid itself of the communist menace, which is threatening its very life, to permit this menace to be pampered anywhere," Aftonposten asserted.

New Factories in Approved Districts Exempt From Income Taxes

Transocean

ROME, October 24.—Shift of Italian industry southward down the peninsula from North Italy, where it is now concentrated, will be encouraged by exempting new factories started in approved districts from income taxes for 10 years, it was announced here today.

The Italian Ministerial Council recently approved the proposition to shift the center of Italian industry southward. The Commission for Public Works was entrusted with putting this decision into effect.

It was stated that the reasons for this shift in the location of Italian industry are chiefly military, since the concentration of many factories in a comparatively small area facilitates enemy attacks. Other reasons are the construction of large hydro-electric power stations throughout the country and the desire to bring industry to the agricultural areas which presently have the greatest surplus of births over deaths.

To bring this program to realization, it is only necessary that the great industrial organizations build new branch plants in the approved regions instead of in North Italy, experts pointed out.

AIR TRAVEL INCREASES

30 Per Cent Gain Noted in Passenger Mileage

United Press

CHICAGO, October 14.—Increased airplane traffic caused by the National Defense Program has resulted in a 30 per cent gain in passenger miles flown for the first half of 1941, the Air Transport Association announced today.

Revenue passenger miles flown from January to July, 1941, amounted to 586,981,362 miles in contrast to the 453,077,175 miles flown during the corresponding period of 1940. June passenger traffic was the record month in the history of commercial aviation, the Association said.

Gross revenue from nation wide air express in May, 1941, was also the highest in history, an increase of 54 per cent over May, 1940, being shown. The weight of shipments carried during May reached 891,212 pounds, a 55 per cent gain over the comparable Month in 1940.

OIL PIPELINE PUSHED TO EASE GAS FAMINE

Entire Industry Cooperating in Project to End Bottleneck In Transportation

I.N.S.

WASHINGTON, October 8.—The American petroleum industry is conducting an all-out campaign to beat the shortage of gasoline on the Atlantic Seaboard.

The entire industry has begun a $200,000,000 construction program to eliminate shortage of transportation, what it calls "the sole bottleneck in the industry's defense service." While transportation facilities were considered adequate before the war, many of our oil tankers are now in the service of Great Britain.

The industry plans to counteract the shortage with the longest single pipe line system in the world—an 1,820-mile hook-up which will pour 250,000 barrels of crude oil daily into the New York-Philadelphia area. Running from East Texas via St. Louis, the immense underground supply line will do the work of 65 tankers.

This plan is now on the desk of Petroleum Coordinator Ickes awaiting approval. Federal Loan Administrator Jesse Jones has proposed that the Federal Government aid in financing this and other gas and oil projects.

Other Projects in View

Other projects revealed by the American Petroleum Institute include a 1,200 mile pipe line from Baton Rouge, La., to Greensboro, N. C., capable of doing the work of 10 tankers; a southeastern line from Florida through Georgia into Tennessee, releasing two ships, and the Portland-Montreal line, releasing at least three more.

The scope of the construction program is so broad as to provide for the completion this year of 27 tankers and of a number of inland waterway barges.

For the first time in 20 years, crude oil is moving east via a pipe line at Lima, Ohio. It is expected to run 1,000 cars regularly on this line.

The 1941 rush program calls for the conversion of petroleum products to the manufacture of explosives. Plants are being built for the manufacture of toluene, an essential to TNT. Synthetic glycerine, also used in the manufacture of explosives, is already being made from petroleum by-products.

Pipeline Plan Submitted

WASHINGTON.—Petroleum Co-ordinator Ickes has announced the oil industry had submitted to him an $80,000,000 plan for the longest single type pipeline system in the world—1,820 miles—which would pour 250,000 barrels of crude oil a day from the Southwest into the New York Area, reports the recent Christian Science Monitor.

The Co-ordinator said 11 large companies had prepared the plan which contemplates starting construction as soon as Secretary Ickes approves it and the President issues a proclamation declaring the line necessary to national defense.

The pipeline network probably would be completed within nine months but its effect would not be felt soon enough to be a factor in solving the immediate petroleum problem caused by lack of transportation in the East, Secretary Ickes said.

The plan proposes a 22-inch line from west of Shreveport, La., near the Texas border, to Salem, Ill., about 490 miles; a 16-inch connecting line from Salem to Wood River, Ill., to tap existing facilities carrying oil from Oklahoma, Kansas, Texas, Mid-Continent and Illinois Areas, about 65 miles; a 24-inch pipeline from the junction of the first two lines near Salem to the so-called New York and Philadelphia Areas with branches to refining centers, about 1,200 miles.

The lines from near Shreveport to New York would be built and operated by a concern to be known as National Defense Pipelines, Inc.

In addition, another new corporation, Emergency Pipelines, Inc., would build and operate a 65-mile-long, 22-inch line from East Texas fields to make connection near Shreveport with the longer line.

Private Financing

Financing of the $80,000,000 system would be private, Secretary Ickes announced. National Defense Pipelines, he said, would borrow 80 per cent of the estimated cost of the lines and facilities by private placement of notes maturing over a five-year period. The balance would be obtained through issuance of junior securities or capital stock which would be purchased by the participating companies.

The participating companies are: Standard Oil Company, of New Jersey; Consolidated Oil Corporation; Sun Oil Company; Atlantic Refining Company; Cities Service Company; Socony-Vacuum Oil Company, Inc.; Tidewater Associated Oil Company; Texas Corporation; Shell Oil Company, Inc.; Gulf Oil Corporation; Pan-American Petroleum & Transport Company.

Any others who desire to participate, the co-ordinator added, may do so within three months after formal execution of the agreement.

"The companies which have formulated this plan already have made considerable progress toward getting this vitally necessary project under way with a minimum of delay," Secretary Ickes said.

"Survey parties in the field and aerial photographing is already in progress. In fact, this stage of the project will probably be completed soon, assuring the making of maximum progress once it is possible to begin actual construction."

BRAZIL SAILORS REFUSE SAILING WAR-ZONE AGAIN

Were Members of Crew of English Convoy Attacked by U-Boats

Transocean

RIO DE JANEIRO, October 24.—"The voyage to England was terrible; no amount of money will induce us to sail into the war zone again," Brazilian sailors told the correspondent of the newspaper Noite at Halifax.

These sailors were members of the crew of the Greek steamer Alexandria, which was sailing in a convoy of 60 vessels to England from South Africa. The convoy was escorted by six British destroyers and several other small war vessels.

En route the convoy was attacked by three German submarines; 15 of the ships were sunk, the remainder were scattered.

The Alexandria finally reached Halifax, where the Brazilian sailors were badly treated and detained for months because they refused to sail to England.

They were finally released upon the intervention of the Brazilian consul in Canada.

GENERAL IN DAKAR FIGHT AFFIRMS FORT PREPARED

Says Defenses Reinforced and Ready to Meet Any Eventuality

United Press.

ORLEANS, October 15.—General Picard, who was present during the British attack on Dakar last year, today affirmed in an interview with the newspaper Republican du Centre, that Dakar had reinforced its defenses and "Now is ready to face any eventuality."

He declared that "our former allies maintain Dakar was bombarded in order to destroy military works. I can tell those gentlemen that the bombardment killed many because it was nowhere near any military objective. From my post of command I had the privilege of following the entire course of battle.

"Dakar, which is reinforcing its means of defense, is more than ever ready to face any eventuality," he concluded.

General Picard was decorated with the Commander of the Legion of Honor for the part he played in Dakar's defense.

ARMY-NOTRE DAME GAME ENDS IN TIE

Minnesota Rides Toward Championship as Irish, Cadets Play Scoreless Game

United Press

NEW YORK, November 1.—The mighty Minnesota Juggernaut crashed closer to a National championship today with a heart-tingling 8 to 6 win over the Northwestern Wildcats, as two of the other great gridiron clubs in the nation—Army and Notre Dame—fought to a bitter 0 to 0 tie here.

Seventy-six thousand rabid fans jammed Yankee Stadium to watch the Irish and the Cadets batter each other for 60 minutes in a bruising game featured by goal-line stands by each team.

Both teams confined their efforts in the first period to a punting duel, which was finally interrupted by Bob Hill, fleet Army halfback, who raced 42 yards through a broken field and was almost away to pay territory when he was hauled down on the Irish 30-yard stripe.

Hill Fumbles Ball

Taking the pigskin on the next play in an effort to score, Hill fumbled the ball and it skidded back to Army's 45-yard line where George Murphy, Notre Dame's right half, recovered.

With the ball still in mid-field through the remainder of the quarter, Army took advantage of a break in the second period. A punt skidded off weakly, and Army took possession of the ball on Notre Dame's 27-yard stripe. Driving off tackle and down the middle, Army pushed down to the Irish 10-yard line but found themselves up against a stone-wall defense that held for downs.

Drive back in an exchange of punts, the Army suddenly found themselves in a hole when a blocked punt, penalty and a smear by the driving Notre Dame defenses pushed the Cadets back to their own two-yard stripe. Army punted out, but Notre Dame came bounding back and drove to the 18-yard stripe before they were finally halted.

A heavy rainfall prevented the usual display of pageantry during the half-time intermission, but affected not at all the spirits of spectators.

The third quarter was confined to a punting duel between the two clubs with the exception of a momentary spark when the Irish took the ball in mid-field and drove to Army's 25-yard line before being stopped.

Two long sweeps had spectators on their feet in the final quarter. Halfback Hill and his running mate, Mazur, drove through the ragged Irish defenses to Notre Dame's 25-yard line before being held, but a few minutes later the Irish smashed back with a tremendous push that carried them to Army's 29 before they were stopped.

In Minneapolis, 65,000 fans braved cold and snow to watch Minnesota smash Lynn Waldorf's Northwestern Wildcats, thereby annexing the Big Nine Crown, keeping their win slate clear and driving forward to the mythical national title.

Drive 47 Yards

The Gophers uncovered tremendous power in the opening quarter and drove 47 yards in straight plays to Northwestern's 10-yard stripe where Don Clawson, Wildcat quarterback, intercepted Bill Daley's pass when the Minnesota right half found himself rushed by the Northwestern forward wall.

Standing back of his own goal line to punt out, Bill de Correvant, brilliant Northwestern left half, missed a bad pass from center and gave Minnesota a safety and a two point lead.

Minnesota poured on the heat again in the second quarter and smashed through the lighter Northwestern line to the Wildcat's 26-yard line where they were held, and then Northwestern came back into the game with a bang.

Otto Graham, second-string halfback, went into the lineup for Northwestern and a moment later threw a perfectly timed pass to Gob Motl, end, which was good for 73 yards and a touchdown. Northwestern supporters saw their victory hopes die, however, when the play was called back and Northwestern was penalized for having an ineligible lineman beyond the scrimmage line.

Apparently not bothered by this failure, Graham again uncorked his powerful arm and threw a pass to Clarence Hasse, the other Northwestern wingman, which was good for 33 yards and a touchdown. The try for point was missed and Northwestern led, 6 to 2.

Faced with the possibility of defeat, Bernie Bierman went down into his bag of tricks and pulled up a touchdown play in the third inning. Without utilizing their traditional shift, Minnesota swung into the play and with Higgins carrying the ball, poured blockers around right end to mow down the defense which had been caught off guard by Minnesota's failure to shift. Higgins raced 41 yards for the score and Minnesota took an 8 to 0 lead.

Pushed Around Field

Tired by the battering Gopher attack, Northwestern found itself pushed around the field in the final quarter and stopped a touchdown play on the four-yard line when it seemed that Minnesota was again bound for paydirt. Northwestern kicked out, and then held until the end of the game.

Swede Larsen's Navy eleven pounced on Pennsylvania before a sell-out crowd of 73,000 fans at Philadelphia, and scored a 13 to 6 victory to give them an undefeated record so far this year—marred only by the tie with Harvard.

The Navy smashed straight down the field in the first 10 plays of the game—featured by Busik's 14-yard cut-back to the weak side of the line. The Navy reached Penn's eight-yard line on the series of plays but was held there for three downs. Bob Leonard, Navy lineman who does the kicking, tried for a field goal but the attempt was wide.

Taking the ball back of midfield, on their own 48-yard line, Navy again began pounding back down the field. The drive was climaxed by a 12-yard pass from Busik to Booth, with the latter scoring standing up. Leonard then converted, and Navy led, 7 to 0.

The second quarter was marred by frequent fumbles as the heavy rain made the pill hard to handle. One of the fumbles enabled Navy to again reach Penn's nine-yard line, but Leonard's second try for a field goal was also wide.

Uncorking smashing power and brilliant blocking, Navy drove seventy yards in 11 plays, not one of which was a pass. Clark went over for the touchdown from the six yard line, and Navy took a 13 to 0 lead.

Pennsylvania flashed momentarily in the third when Joe Kane, tricky open-field runner, raced 33 yards through the entire Navy lineup for a score. Pennsylvania also failed to convert.

Fearful of a possible last minute upset, Navy turned on the power again in the final quarter and three times swept down field to end up inside of Penn's 13-yard marker, but they were held every time.

The Harvard Crimson took a sweet 6 to 4 decision from their traditional Princeton rivals today, in the big Ivy League contest.

In the Midwest, Illinois found itself snowed under by the Michigan club, 20 to 0, but the game did not affect Big Nine standings since Minnesota has already beaten Michigan. The Fordham Rams came west and took the Purdue Boilermakers into camp by a 17 to 0 tune.

In the Far West, the Washington State College Cougars scored an upset victory over the Oregon Webfeet, winning by a 13 to 0 score over the favored boys from Eugene. California trounced its "little brother," the University of California at Los Angeles, by a 27 to 7 score, while Stanford won its traditional tilt with Santa Clara, 27 to 7.

They are "Hikari to Chikara" (Light and Power), "Yakusofu" (Story of Medical Plant), "Kikanju" (Machine Gun), "Nippon no Keikogyo" (Japan's Light Industries), "Edajima no Kiroku" (Diary at Edajima), "Puropera" (Propeller), "Warera no Kosho" (Our Arsenal), "Chizu no Yomikata" (The Way of Reading Map), and "Yama to Mizu" (Mountain and Water).

Music for "Jiro Monogatari" (The Tale of Children), an all-talkie composed by Tadashi Hattori will be provided by members of the Keio Mandolin Club. The picture is now in the process of shooting at the Tamagawa studio of the Nikkatsu under the direction of Koji Shima.

A party of screen players, consisting of Minoru Takata, Junko Tachibana, Ryunosuke Tsukigata, Shimpei Yokoyama and Kaoru Ito, left Tokyo for Okinawa Prefecture at the end of last week to resume a work on location for "Shiroi Hekiga" (A White Wall Painting), the production of which had been suspended due to the dissolution of the Nanwo Eiga Company. The camera work is now in the hands of the Toho Eiga.

The Japan Eigasha is now speeding up the completion of editing "Barukan Sakusen" (the Balkan Campaign), a newsreel, depicting the successful German military campaign in the Balkans. The picture will be released in the middle of this month.

"Sakura no Kuni" (The Land of Cherry), the newest picture produced at the Ofuna studio of the Shochiku Motion Picture Company, has been decided as unsuitable for showing before children under the age of 14.

After making an overwhelming contribution to the silver screen for many years, the Kyoto studio of the Toho Eiga was formally closed October 31 because of the establishment of a new order in the motion picture industry, now underway.

Permits have been granted for the construction of a theater showing culture pictures exclusively, which is to be called the Eiga Kyoshitsu and which will be constructed at Shijo Karasumaru, Kyoto under the management of the Sennichi Tochi Amusement Enterprises.

The Education Ministry has recently approved the following pictures as culture features. They are "Kenko wa Onsen Kara" (Health and Hot Spring) by Railways Ministry, "Boto-o-Toku" (Boat) and "Uchiwa no Dekirumade" (The Fan-Making) by Toa, "Imono" (Cast Metal) by Tokyo Eigasha, and "Tsuchi-ni-Ikiru" (Living on Earth) by Toho Eiga.

CRUCIAL TILT TODAY IN KANTO FOOTBALL

Meiji Tackles Waseda at 3 p.m. In Korakuen Stadium—Both Teams Undefeated

Standings
Kanto Football League

	Won	Lost
Meiji	3	0
Waseda	2	0
Keio	2	1
Nichidai	1	1
Hosei	0	3
St. Paul's	0	3

Two undefeated elevens of the Kanto Inter-collegiate Football League, Waseda and Meiji will clash today in a battle that may decide the championship of the 1941 season. Kick-off will be at 3 p.m. at the Korakuen stadium.

Meiji with victories over Hosei, Nichidai and Keio can virtually cop the championship by downing Waseda today. If Meiji wins, only a weak St. Paul's team stands in their way for the League crown. Waseda, on the other hand has routed both Hosei and St. Paul's.

While Waseda has shown a sound running attack in their games, the boys from Surugadai have come up with a passing attack that has made them the most dangerous team of the League.

In whipping Keio, 24 to 0 two weeks, Meiji uncorked as brilliant a passing attack as have been seen in the last several years. Long and short passes to the flat and tricky reverse passes from the Notre Dame system all clicked with amazing accuracy make Meiji a dangerous eleven.

Waseda, as in the past, presents a hefty forward wall that will outweigh Meiji's line. Their attack is based with a mixumum of power thrown to the outside. End runs, slow breaking wide reverses have dominated their play this season. They have an experienced line that should hold pretty well to check Meiji's ground attack. However, the problem as have been for all Meiji's opponents, is to find a defense that will stop Meiji's over-head game.

A Meiji versus Waseda clash has always been bitterly fought. Last fall the two fought to a 0 to 0 tie. Two years ago, Waseda beat off a late drive of Meiji to triumph 6 to 0.

While all indications point to a thrilling game, this may be the year that Meiji will finish the season undefeated to carry off the League championship.

The probable line-up:

Meiji	Waseda
L.E.—Oda	Nakamura
L.T.—Ikeda	Uono
L.G.—Koga	Kitamura
C. —Terada	Kagami
R.G.—Nikaido	Kaji
R.T.—Takemoto	Kageyama
R.E.—Kunimoto	Narumi
Q.B.—Fukunaga	Umeda
L.H.—Wada	Tomishima
R.H.—Kawashima	Fujii
F.B.—Obana	Yasuda

MEIJI TRIMS WASEDA IN CRUCIAL CONTEST

Biggest Crowd So Far Watches Victors Score 32-0 Win in Spectacular Football

Sweeping everything before them with a mighty display of speed, power and coordination, the Meiji eleven crashed closer to the Kanto Inter-collegiate championship Thursday with a thrilling 32 to 0 victory over Waseda at the Korakuen stadium.

Despite the score, the game produced some of the best brand of football seen this season, featured by the sudden striking power of Meiji which thrilled the greatest week-day crowd of the year.

The Meiji boys were great Thursday, not only because of their sound attack, but because they were a heads-up team that cashed in heavily on every opportunity. The speed of their backs plus superb blocking enabled them to sweep through a tough fighting Waseda eleven for five touchdowns and two conversions.

Wada, Obana Score

Meiji hit pay territory twice in the second and third period and added another six points in the final period. Wada and Obana scored two touchdowns apiece while Shimogaki accounted for the other by taking a Waseda punt and racing through the entire opposition to score from sixty-yards out. Obana placed kicked for the two extra points.

Wada, fleet left halfback, early in the second period raced 24 yards, almost away for a touchdown through a broken field when he was forced out of bounds on Waseda's 1-yard stripe.

Taking the ball on the next play, Wada swept around his right end to score standing up giving Meiji a six-point lead.

Meiji struck again mid-way in the same period. From his own 45-yard line, Wada smashed off his right tackle. Cornered along the side-line, Wada lateraled to Obana who fought his way across the goal-line for Meiji's second tally. Obana placed kicked the extra point and Meiji increased their margin to 13 points.

At the start of the third period, Waseda with Yasuda pacing a vicious ground attack rolled up two first downs. However, Meiji took the ball on downs and kicked out to Waseda's 30. Waseda then attempted a pass which was intercepted by center Terada, who lateraled to Obana on the Waseda 32. Obana picked up a cordon of block and stepped across the goal line for Meiji's third touchdown.

After the kick-off, Waseda, making no headway, punted out from their 35. The long kick was taken by Shimogaki on the run on his 38.

Good Blocking Staged

He quickly moved to his right and aided by brilliant blocking of his teammates, ran straight upfield along the sideline to score standing up, giving Meiji a 25 to 0 lead. Obana again placed kicked the point increasing the score to 26.

Meiji turned on the heat again in the final few minutes of the game. Wada, who had returned to the game this time spear-headed an attack that took Meiji to Waseda's 26-yard line. Fukunaga then shot a bullet pass to end Wakatake, who lateraled the pill into the waiting arms of Wada.

Wada, picked his way for the remaining distance out-sprinting the thoroughly tired Waseda players and Meiji's score mounted to 32 points.

Despite the beating, Waseda fought to the bitter end. Fujioka, Yasuda, Nakamura all played sixty-minutes of bang-up football. In the line, Fukushima, Kagami, Noro stood out with their vicious defensive play. For Meiji it was a decisive team triumph, in which the forward wall with deadly blocking cleared the way for the fast stepping Meiji backs.

The line-up:

Meiji		Waseda
Oda	L.E.	Fukushima
Ikeda	L.T.	Tabata

TURK CHIEF'S WORDS PLEASING TO BERLIN

President Inonue's Policy Statement Specially Satisfactory, Spokesman Says

D.N.B.

BERLIN, November 6.—The recent statement of State President Ismet Inonue with regard to Turkey's policy and her relations toward the big Powers, especially Germany, has been acknowledged with special satisfaction in Berlin political quarters, according to the spokesman of the Wilhelmstrasse at the last press conference.

With particular interest and satisfaction, so the spokesman told foreign press representatives, did Germany receive the assurance of the Turkish State President that his country's relations with Germany were developing ever increasingly friendly and would remain so, as was proved by the exchange of Ambassadors, the conclusion of the German-Turkish amity pact and the German-Turkish economic agreement.

In view of this conception held by the Turkish State President and based on an honest political conviction it must, however, be expected, so the spokesman went on, that every effort would be made by the British propaganda to lay out mines and to create misunderstanding.

If, therefore, the London Times wants to make Turkey believe that Germany's operations on the southern sector of the Eastern Front constitute a threat to Turkey, the British intentions are clear although such allegations must not be taken seriously, for the history of Turkey clearly shows from which direction any menace is to be expected and how to counter it.

Moreover, the spokesman concluded, Turkey most probably has not forgotten what has been revealed by the German memorandum about the Soviet claims on the Dardanelles and the Bosphorus which had been put forth by Mr. Molotov. Berlin has no doubt that the responsible political leaders in Turkey are fully aware of the actual aims that are joined in the Anglo-Soviet alliance.

Bans Cellophane Wrapper

Transocean

NEW YORK, October 29.—The Canadian Government has prohibited the use of cellophane for wrapping purposes, with the exception of foodstuffs, it was reported from Ottawa yesterday. The prohibition was motivated by an explanation to the effect that the raw materials required for manufacture of cellophane were more urgently needed for the production of armaments.

Turkish Gold Output

ANKARA, October 27.—The improved gold and silver mines of Ergani and Morgu, Turkey, will produce 500,000 kilograms of gold and 12 and one half tons of silver annually, the Istanbul newspaper Vatan estimated today. Ergani and Morgu are among the richest mines in the world.

Fight Follows British Insult to U.S. Sailors But Papers Are Silent

D.N.B.

BERLIN, November 6.—The Chicago Tribune correspondent, George Morgenstern, has published a series of articles, dealing with the increasing friction between Americans and Englishmen in the United States. These incidents have been most serious in the American naval stations where British men-of-war have come in for repairs. None of these occurrences had been reported by the American press. The correspondent describes one of these brawls at the naval base of Newport News, in the course of which the entire city police force had to come to the assistance of the military police. British sailors on leave had shouted at American sailors that a 13th stripe had been added to the American flag, which was yellow. This insult immediately caused the outbreak of the fight.

Russian Attempts To Smash Germans End in Big Losses

ports the Stockholm correspondent of the London Daily Telegraph.

The same correspondent also reports that the Russians staged an air-raid over Danzig on Monday and heavily bombed the Tirpitz Submarine Training School depot and wharves.

The Daily Mail correspondent on the south Russian frontier reports that Marshal Timoshenko is moving masses of fresh troops and equipment from Grozny and the Astrakhan area toward Rostov and has drafted reinforcements from the Tiflis area toward Krasnoda in order to block any German crossing from Kertsch. Strongly fortified positions are awaiting the Germans in both sectors.

General Sir Archibald Wavell is believed to be ready to march into the Caucasus at any moment, according to the Stockholm correspondent of the London Daily Express. This correspondent also states that the Russians have thrown in over 100 tanks to check the German infiltration toward Rostov.

Soviet Attempts Described

Transocean

BERLIN, October 30.—The methods employed by the Bolsheviks in attempting to break through the German ring around Leningrad in early October and to land on the German occupied coast-line, were described by Colonel Dr. K. Hesse in a report to the Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung. His report reads:

"Toward 3:30 a.m. in all billets along the coastal front extraordinarily heavy detonations were felt, coming from shells fired by heavy Soviet artillery in Kronstadt and Leningrad. The shelling lasted about an hour, and during that time we were able to count more than 100 shots fired.

"While dawn and fog still obstructed the general view, flat-bottomed boats towed by motor-launches appeared 300 to 500 meters away from the shore. The larger boats were manned by approximately 50 men, the smaller ones by about 15. As Soviet prisoners taken later testified, these men belonged to a marine detachment from Kronstadt and the 10th Rifle Regiment from Leningrad.

"Before our artillery was able to open effective fire, they had clambered out of their boats into the water, which was about 1.5 meters deep and about eight degrees above freezing point. They waded toward the shore. German sentinels then opened fire; it was not, however, sufficient to prevent Soviets from gaining some foot-hold along the shore.

"By about 6 a.m. the enemy had occupied the vast stretch of the hills and entered the village. German soldiers opened fire from the windows and doors of their billets. At this moment the situation was anything but clear. The Commanding General had the impression that fighting had started on a wide front. Artillery fire was to be heard from both flanks. Meanwhile reports came in from the land front that heavy enemy tanks had broken into the main battle line of the left division.

"However, all German troops fighting in this sector had experienced such moments before, when it was absolutely necessary to act on their own initiative. They knew that they were superior to the enemy in every way, in armament, tactics, and training. Hardly any command was necessary. Everyone takes up his rifle, pistol or hand-grenade to check the enemy's advance. The enemy cannot be checked at all points, and thus Soviet troops advance to the railroad line, about 1,200 meters from the shore.

"When day breaks, the following situation is revealed: Bolshevik detachments, sometimes of the strength of one company, are wedged between German defense nests, which had immediately been formed. Such nests consist of a single anti-tank gun and a few gunners at some places, at others of an infantry platoon. Even the brass band of a regiment has had to take up arms and forms another point of defense. A block of houses in the village is defended by drivers of a transport column.

"With the coming of daylight the first Soviet planes appear, first in small number, later in stronger formations. They discharge their bombs and use their board weapons against the German positions. Their principal task is to prevent German reinforcements from arriving at the battle front, but in these attempts they have no success.

"The Germans know what to do—they must reach the shore. On the other hand Soviets seem somewhat confused and unable to gauge the situation properly. They wait for further orders. Before they are aware of it, they are outflanked. Some Bolsheviks are already to be seen retreating, trying to take cover behind houses. However, the mere fact that they concentrate at certain points makes them a good target for German anti-tank gunners. Together with heavy machine-guns of infantry battalions they open a brief but fierce fire.

"I later counted at one place alone eight Bolshevik corpses, at another twelve, while at a third place 23 dead Bolsheviks were heaped.

"The slope of a hill in this district is just studded with the forms of dead and wounded Bolsheviks.

"Soviets by now are in full retreat, heading for the point of their disembarkation, hoping to be able to retrieve their boats, which, however, had meanwhile either drifted away or been destroyed by German artillery. By now it is 8:30 a.m. and the position of Soviets is hopeless. There is no use either that more and more Soviet planes appear overhead, since German pursuit planes are already on the scene while every available anti-aircraft gun is blazing away.

"German soldiers, German arms and German military training have carried the day. Even though at some isolated points Soviet tanks might manage to reach the German lines or even force a break-through, they never last long. One after the other, these huge Soviet monsters are destroyed by German defense units.

"By noon the outcome of the fight has been decided. The battle-field is strewn with the bodies of killed and wounded Bolsheviks. Several hundred are taken prisoner, while the entire equipment brought along by them is captured."

SURVEY REVEALS RISE IN DEFENSE PRODUCTION

Aircraft Output in United States Rises 88 Per Cent in Nine Months

Reuters

WASHINGTON, November 2.—The output of aircraft engines has risen 88 per cent during the first nine months of this year. Enough engines are now being produced for about 2,000 aircraft monthly. These facts are reported in a survey by the Office of Production Management, which adds that the United States produced 561 military aircraft in July, 1940. By September, 1941, the monthly output had risen to 1,914.

Dealing with the Navy, the survey says that since the naval expansion program was started, the Navy has commissioned more ships than in all the years between 1922 and 1937. The Navy now has 344 major fighting ships on hand, and 347 building.

The survey declares that the United States has gone a long way toward becoming the arsenal of democracy, although a great deal remains to be done to meet all-out defense requirements.

Greater Europe's Future Railway System To Stretch From Gibraltar to the Urals

D.N.B.

BERLIN, November 6.—"The gigantic railway system of the future Greater European economic area will stretch from Gibraltar to the Urals and from the north coast of Africa as well as from the Black Sea to the North Cape," says Dr. Walter Greavell in the Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung.

"The improvement of the connections running from the East to the West is of special importance and the main East-West lines can only meet the requirements if they have quadruple tracks.

"The general shift to the East will also find its expression in an increase of shipping traffic and the Danube as well as the Vistula will become the main waterways. The Vistula with its connections to the Bug and the Dnieper will serve to open up the Black Sea as well as the Baltic Sea and will be connected with the West and the Southwest by additional waterways.

"The task confronting the sea communications will be no less important; for Europe will need ships on the Baltic as well as on the Black Sea, the North Sea and the Mediterranean and also world trade will have much need of ocean going vessels. World trade will be prosperous again although different from what it used to be.

"The exclusion of Great Britain as a transit country will give additional importance to the ports of the North Sea. The economic system of continental Europe with its connections to Africa, the Middle East and Siberia will serve as one big entity in the whole transportation system."

Y.C.A.C. WILL STAGE U.S. FOOTBALL GAME

To Play Tokyo Old Boys Squad At Club Grounds This Sunday

American football will make its debut at the Yokohama Country and Athletic Club grounds this season on Sunday afternoon when the club eleven will play the Tokyo Old Boys squad at 1 p.m.

Other items on the Y.C. and A.C. weekend program include soccer, basketball, hockey, rugby and tennis matches. Lawn bowls players are expected to keep up their activity in this sport, while table tennis and badminton enthusiasts will no doubt get in some practice for the tournaments which will get under way shortly.

The lists for the various events of the badminton and tennis tourneys are now posted on the club notice-board and members planning to compete are being requested to sign up this weekend.

Soccer on Saturday

The first sports event on Saturday afternoon will be the soccer match between the Y.C. and A.C. second eleven and the Yokohama Third Middle School at 2 p.m. This contest will be followed by another association football game, the club's first stringers meeting outside opposition at 3:15 p.m.

Next on the program will be a basketball fixture, an intra-club contest between the "old timers" and "the rest" 5 p.m.

On Sunday morning there will be two hockey matches. The first will be a mixed game in which the club lady players and men not playing for the first eleven will participate, at 10 a.m. sharp. The second contest will be between the Y.C. and A. C. firsts and a non-club team, scheduled to get under way at 10:30 a.m.

American football fans in the port city are looking forward with keen interest to the game between the Y.C. and A.C. and the Tokyo Old Boys eleven set for 1 p.m. Sunday.

In spite of the dearth of experienced players, the Y.C. and A.C. is fielding an American football team this season, thus maintaining its traditional connection with the sport which the club assisted in founding nearly a decade ago.

Visitors Are Experienced

The gridders from the capital are an experienced and heavy group of former college stars, and they will be favored to come out on top in this fray. However, the home team has some fine players, and the game should produce some good football.

According to the Y.C. and A.C. coach, Bob Pennybacker, the club team will feature a revival of the T formation, with a balanced line, With "Bucky" Harriss filling the quarterback berth, Eastlake, Planas and Agajan as halfbacks and Schoene at fullback, it is thought that a series of cross-bucks, power-plays and passes will be developed that will have the opposition guessing at times.

The line has not yet been decided on, but among those available are Swanson, Petroff, Weiss, Boixo, Fernandes, Wendbladh, Vorobiov, Frank, Child and the Salter brothers.

These players and others interested are expected to have a short practice Sunday at 10 a.m., prior to the game in the afternoon.

Manager Kajitani of the Old Boys has promised the Y.C. and A.C. a return match at the Korakuen Stadium in Tokyo sometime next month.

It is not known what players will appear for the Old Boys, who will probably employ an unbalanced line, with emphasis on the crushing steamroller tactics that have characterized this team in the past.

Following the American football game there will be a rugby game between the Y.C. and A.C.'s unbeaten first fifteen and the Omon Club of Tokyo at 3 p.m. Spectators will thus have the opportunity of witnessing and comparing the American and English rugby codes in one afternoon.

As the Y.C. and A.C. tennis committee has issued a notice that all second round matches in the club's autumn tennis tournament are to be played off by Sunday, November 16, it is expected that many contests in the various events will be decided this weekend.

The Y.C. and A.C. line-ups will probably be as follows:

Soccer

First team: F. R. Harriss; H. Fernandes, E. Eymard; M. L. Russel', H. Schoene (acting captain), L. A. M. Frank; W. H. Blamey, U. Wendbladh, J. J. Planas, G. W. Makepeace and D. Vorobiov.

ECONOMIC MATERIAL LACKING IN SIBERIA

European Part of Soviet Union Is of Decisive Importance in This Respect

Transocean

BERLIN, October 28.—Siberia is without important economic resources; it is the European part of the Soviet Union which is of decisive importance in this respect, German economic experts pointed out here yesterday.

They said that half of the territory of the Soviet Union is still unexplored. In 1939 the extent of Soviet Russia was 21,300,000 square kilometers, nearly half of which—47 per cent—was covered with ice all year round. Another 10 per cent is absolute desert. Thus 57 per cent of the whole of Russia is useless for agricultural purposes.

Of the remaining 43 per cent, only 30 per cent is suitable for meadows, fields, and for tilling.

Only 10 per cent of the Soviet Union is actually suitable for intensive cultivation. The most important agricultural regions are in European Russia; western Siberia is only of secondary importance.

The Ukraine is most suitable for agriculture; 69 per cent of this land is being cultivated for grain or vegetables.

The gigantic central Asiatic steppes consist of half sandy lands and 30 per cent desert; the fertile regions along the river banks amount to only 15 per cent of the total territory.

Only a small part of the Soviet territories in the Far East can be used for agriculture. Now even this is impossible because of the lack of transportation facilities and of man-power. There only the present thin population can be maintained by the grain crops.

The 24,000,000 people living in the regions between the Ural mountains and the Pacific Ocean are insufficient to materially increase the agricultural production of the country. In fact these territories always required imports from other sections of Russia.

Indeed, at the present time, more than half of the entire population of the Soviet Union is living in territories under German control; to the Soviets have been left only the expanse of the North, Northeastern, and Southeastern regions of European Russia and Asia. These territories are thinly populated and lack transport facilities.

CROATS SIGN ITALIAN PACT

Concerns Frontier Demarcation Between Croatia and Montenegro

Transocean

AGRAM, October 28.—The Croat-Italian agreement concerning the new frontier demarcation between Croatia and Montenegro was signed by the Croat Foreign Ministry yesterday. The new frontier begins south of Dubrovnic (Ragusa), runs along the old frontier between the former Austro-Hungarian Monarchy and Montenegro up to the point where the three countries Croatia, Montenegro, and Serbia meet, at the Kljunak Peak.

An introductory statement precedes the agreement, declaring that the agreement was drawn up in a spirit of friendship and cooperation existing between Italy and Croatia and in accordance with the wishes of the population of Montenegro after the restoration of this State.

BULGAR FOOD ASSURED

All Necessary Steps Taken for Sufficiency, Says Farm Chief

Transocean

Bulgaria's cultivated area has been increased and the output of farms will be improved by the rationalization of farming work. By the end of this year the Agriculture Ministry's five-year plan will be completed, Mr. Kusheff said.

they are always ready to give a little—a very little in exchange for a vast deal; in which respect the Japanese are fools, for when they give they think nothing of giving, forgetting to ask for something in return."

Why France Fell?

Regarding the Anglo-Japanese Alliance Mr. Tokutomi says: "I was one of those who welcomed this alliance, but from the very outset I had one fear and misgiving—that the Japanese in their infatuation might be Anglicized heart and soul. And I repeatedly asserted the need of the Japanese keeping cool heads and the dignity of autonomous spirit and independence. My voice was drowned in the din of jollification, caused by flag parades by day and lantern processions by night. It was a one-sided love. The British, while they were too clever to betray their inner thought in so many words, had all but declared, "Don't be too sure of yourself, Little Japan. I am only making a watch dog of you, and that not for very long either."

But Japan behaved like a bewitched lover, ready to go the whole way with its Ally and even cross the Styx in the nether world, if need be, and what was the result? Japan experienced a terrible eye-opener at the Washington Conference in 1921. Before then there had already been a warning of what was coming at the Versailles Conference in 1920. During the World War Britain had played the good brother to Japan, but after, Japan became a nuisance. Thus when Japan brought up the racial problem in Paris the British delegates, though they approved of it in principle, stood by with nonchalance while the Australian Hughes fought it tooth and nail! The British said that in view of Australia's great contribution toward the victory, they dared not cross their demand at the peace conference. Was it not Japan which had convoyed the Australian troops to the European front? But the British logic would have it that while Australia's face must be saved because it had helped the British cause, Japan's face might be demolished though it had helped Australia.

The author dwells at length on France's case, and quoting from Andre Maurois and other writers, adds his own theory, "France has fallen because it lacked self-help—a good lesson for Japan in case Japan may be tempted to place its strength in any but its own preparedness." Mr. Tokutomi then goes on to analyze the strained relations between the United States and Japan, and concludes with a clinching word upon the value of the triple alliance, which, he declares, differs from all other alliances in this that whereas the previous alliances had been made with specific objectives of regional character, this one was based on a far-reaching political idealism—the establishment of a new order in the world with Germany and Italy as leaders in the European theater and Japan as mistress of the East Asia. As already said, the book, if full justice is to be done it, must be read in from start to finis, and I make no doubt but that it will be widely read not only in this country but also in the rest of the world as the latest pointer to Japanese thinking on the world crisis.

SERB GOVERNMENT GIVEN DESCRIPTION

Frankfurter Zeitung Points Out Administration Entrusted To People

Transocean

BERLIN, October 27.—The present administration of Serbia was described in an article published by the Frankfurter Zeitung this morning.

Serbia now consists of what was known as Serbia before 1914; a territory of about 48,000 square kilometers containing some 4,000,000 inhabitants, besides the former Jugoslavian section of the Banat which comprises 900,000 square kilometers and has a population of about 700,000 persons.

From the moment of the commencement of the German occupation, it was decided to entrust the administration of this territory to the Serbs themselves under German supervision. Hence Serbian commissars were appointed for the various governmental departments; these were selected mainly from among the old supporters of former Premier Milan Stoyadinovitch and adherents of the so-called "Zber" movement.

Early in September a regular cabinet was formed; its membership included a number of such commissars, the Frankfurter Zeitung article discloses.

In conclusion the Frankfurter Zeitung said that it now was up to the Serbs to take advantage of the facilities afforded them and to respond to the appeal to reason and a sense of responsibility which was recently made by Premier General Nedilch.

Believe It or Not, by Ripley

COMMENT IS MADE ON STALIN'S SPEECH

Characterized by Customary Exaggerations and Plots, Says D.N.B.

The speech Stalin held in commemoration of the October revolution is characterized by his customary exggerations. It was intended for three categories of listeners, according to D.N.B.

The first part was meant for the Russians. An effort is made to explain the fact away that the German armies have conquered nearly the whole of European Russia. This explanation was no success, however, for although Stalin is praising the fighting spirit and the equipment of the Red Army in exalted terms, he has to admit that the Germans have got more of all the things which he is claiming for the Russians. A better organization, higher fighting spirit, more tanks, more planes, and more heavy automatic weapons.

The second part of the speech is to impress the Germans. Stalin is intent on destroying all the Germans who have invaded Russia. The German conquerors are to be pitilessly wiped out. The meaning of this menace can be interpreted in different manners. It must cause suspicion that Stalin is alluding to an alleged order of the German High Command, to murder the Russian civilian population.

Everybody knows, of course, that no such order exists, and that on the contrary the population of the occupied territories welcomed the German troops as their liberators. Apparently Stalin is trying to prepare world public opinion for a new horrible crime with his mendacious assertions.

Perhaps he is thinking of killing the German prisoners of war, or the Volga Germans who were forced to migrate to Siberia. Probably the Bolshevist dictator believes that he can exert pressure on the German leaders in this manner.

Mass Murder No Solution

This is a fatal illusion, however. Bolshevism can no longer put off its extermination by the mass murder of prisoners of war, and of hostages. It will be relentlessly continued, so that once and for all the system of Bolshevist menaces will disappear from the face of the earth.

In the third part of his speech Stalin addresses his allies. He, the head of the Communist Internationale, the aim of which is the destruction of world capitalism, is testifying to the two greatest capitalistic states, that their form of Government is not plutocratic, but socialistic. The meaning of this compliment becomes clear, if one compares it with the demands attached to it. This part of Stalin's speech is one great accusation of Great Britain and of the United States, who are leaving the Soviet Union alone in its death struggle.

Stalin is trying to explain the military misfortune of the Red Army with the fact that no British relief offensive materialized in Western Europe. He is demanding such an offensive with increased vigor and even goes to the length of announcing the formation of a second front on the European continent, i.e. the landing of British troops in the near future.

There are three explanations for this strange assertion. Either Stalin is giving away a military secret. In that case the most important element for the success of a British invasion, that of surprise, would be lost. Or Stalin believes that by announcing a new front in the West, he can bluff the German leaders and cause them to withdraw some troops from the East. Or, and this version seems the most likely one, Stalin has looked through the double-crossing of the British.

He knows that Churchill does not intend to keep the promises, given by Beaverbrook and Harriman, but is leaving the Soviet Union to its fate, as he did with all former continental allies of Britain. For having been fooled, Stalin intends to take his revenge by causing the British Government inner political difficulties on a large scale.

Labor Wants Invasion

A British invasion of Western Europe has frequently been demanded by the Labor Party and its papers. Premier Churchill has been trying to prove with all means at his disposal, among others by publishing Lord Gort's diary on the evacuation from Dunkirk, that such an enterprise would be the sheerest folly. Although in his past he has been ready for any adventure, (it will be enough to mention Gallipoli and Archangel) he called the demands of the Labor Party an expression of fireside strategy. British public opinion had been half way quieted with such statements.

Now the same demands are voiced by Stalin, the chief commander of the Red Army, whom the British press during the last months has pictured as the greatest realist of the century and the only man, capable of defeating Germany. There is no doubt, therefore, that Stalin's demand for a second front in the West will find an immense echo in Great Britain and in the United States. This echo will be all the stronger, as the Bolshevist dictator never even mentions the Caucasus and General Wavell.

In conclusion it can be said that it was the threefold aim of Stalin's speech to calm the Russians, to frighten the Germans, and to accuse the British. For this purpose Stalin raised his voice, although he had never yet spoken on similar occasions and had let Molotov and Kalinin do the talking in former years. It was the voice of one who has lost all connection with his own people and the world around him.

Even Stalin ought to know that the Russian people can no longer be deceived and calmed after having watched the victorious advance of the German armies with its own eyes, that menacing the German people is a waste of time, and that finally even the most touching plea can not make the British desist from their intended treason.

the fact of book-piracy in China. The readers know the writer of the treatise by his new book, The Religious Press in China, published some months ago, representing for the first time a rather complete enumeration of all religious periodicals. The same objectivity and impartiality which made the contribution so helpful to journalists and politicians occupied with things Chinese, is prevailing in the recent study of the diligent scholar.

Based upon the solid knowledge of all correspondent Chinese sources, he gives a summary of the Chinese domestic arrangements in relation to writing and publishing books. Expensive printing process has always widely hindered the circulation. The authors and patrons were generally not looking for material gains or financial returns because the books were for the most part given away as presents. The introduction of Western printing machinery into China dates back to 1814. It is only since the last quarter of the past century, that printing has been developed to any great extent. Due to the fact, that since the 19th century English had become internationally the most widely spoken language of educated classes in the Far East, many complaints were to be seen since that time mainly from America and Great Britain, which had the greatest economic interests at stake. Legislative measures taken for the protection of foreign copyrights in 1896 could not prevent the pirating of English books.

Many cases of copyright law suits are to be known, the most spectacular of which was that of the publication of Webster's Collegiate Dictionary. All counter-measures and efforts made by foreign countries as well as by the leading foreign bookstores in Shanghai to curb the increased pirating through cooperation, remained unsuccessful. The main types of books which are reprinted in China include above all textbooks of any description, especially those for colleges and universities, in science, medicine, technology, social sciences, linguistic and literature. In Shanghai pirated books are advertised by at least one radio station. Some Shanghai firms have agents in New York and London which watch for new books and rush copies to China by clipper plane.

This is a very short survey of the contents of the extremely interesting study made by Professor Loewenthal. He is not at all content with the enumeration and explanation of the present situation, but tries to offer a constructive solution. His voice ought to be heard by all who have to do anything with the matter!

OIL CARS LACKING ON PACIFIC COAST

Acute Shortage Instead of Excess, California Senator Downey Declares

Senator Sheridan Downey, Democrat, of California, said that the Pacific Coast is suffering from an acute shortage of railroad tank cars and cited figures which, if correct, would demolish the belief that 20,000 idle tank cars are available to alleviate the gasoline shortage on the Atlantic Coast, says a Washington, September 8, report to the New York Hera'd Tribune. The report continues: Quoting telegrams from oil and transportation companies in California, Senator Downey said that "so far as is known there is not a surplus tank car on the Pacific Coast." The surplus of 20,000 tank cars mentioned by J. J. Pelley, president of the Association of American Railroads, in testimony has been entirely eliminated by the increased demand for petroleum products and tank cars in the 12 months since Mr. Pelley's figures were compiled, according to Senator Downey's information.

Earlier, in the hearing of the special Senate committee investigating the gasoline situation, Russell E. Singer, general manager of the American Automobile Association, asked the committee to recommend an end of the 7 p.m. to 7 a.m. curfew on gasoline filling stations. The night closing of gasoline stations has not resulted in any substantial cut in gasoline consumption, nor in lower prices to consumers through reduction in retailers' expenses, Mr. Singer said.

Mr. Singer was followed by Benjamin L. Jacoby, representing the Associated Gasoline Retailers of Philadelphia and vicinity, who urged retention of the gasoline curfew because he said it means that "for the first time since the N.R.A. was declared illegal, the gasoline dealer is not a slave in his station."

Senator Downey said that Mr. Pelley's figures were based on a survey conducted a year ago, and that subsequent checks confirmed them but did not bring them up to date. In the meanwhile, consumption of petroleum products has increased between 10 and 12 per cent, and there are now between 15,000 and 20,000 more tank cars in use than there were a year ago, he said. Therefore, reasoned Senator Downey, the tank-car surplus has been eliminated.

Senator Downey's figure for the increased consumption of petroleum products was confirmed in a general way after the hearing by a statistician in the Office of the Defense Petroleum Coordinator. While no current figures are available, the statistician said, consumption in the first six months of 1941 was 10 per cent higher than in the corresponding period last year, and between September 1, 1940, and January 1, 1941, consumption was steadily rising. He said that the rise has probably continued in the last few months and that Senator Downey's figures "could not be far wrong."

Senator Francis Maloney, Democrat, of Connecticut, chairman of the committee, told Senator Downey that for the time being his committee is relying on the testimony of Mr. Pelley and Ralph Budd, Advisory Transportation Commissioner, who agreed that enough tank cars are available to meet the east coast shortage.

Senator Maloney said that he hopes to wind up the hearings and report to the Senate but that he will resume hearings at any time new developments make it necessary. Ralph K. Davies, Acting Petroleum Coordinator, will be questioned on some points raised in the hearing since his first appearance before the committee on August 28.

A plan for a pipe line from Wichita County, Texas to Savannah, Georgia, was laid before the committee by E. Stanley Giles, president of Trans-American Pipeline Corporation, a company formed to build the proposed line. Mr. Giles said the project would cost $25,000,000 and would bring 70,000 barrels of crude oil East daily, the equivalent of from 12 to 14 tankers operating between the same points. He said he hopes for substantial aid from the government.

The Association of American Railroads announced that application has been made to the Interstate Commerce Commission for hauling gasoline and fuel to oils in tank cars. The proposed rates would continue in effect until December 31, 1942, unless cancelled or extended.

ARGENTINE IS NEUTRAL BUT LEANS TO EUROPE

Influential Governor to Disregard Pan-American Doctrine If War Comes

Transocean

BUENOS AIRES, October 31.—"Argentina is neutral and it must not abandon its policy of neutrality," Dr. Joaquin Argonz, the Governor of Santa Fe Province, told Transocean yesterday.

Argentina will never sever the ties which bind it to Europe. These are not only of an economic, but also of a racial and a spiritual nature, Governor Argonz added.

Speaking as the governor of one of the most important corn raising provinces in Argentina, he emphasized that Europe is in reality Argentina's only market. It is superfluous to point out that the United States can never be an important buyer of Argentine products, since it produced the same things, he said.

If one of the American republics were to enter the war for reasons which have nothing to do with the interests of the American continents, Argentina would not be involved. The Pan-American doctrine does not go so far as that, Governor Argonz added.

U.S. Navy Officer Lacked Nerve to Propose To Miss Shiver but Wed Her as Father Asked

United Press

KANSAS CITY, Missouri, September 7.—With the close moral support of his father, but with no prompting, Ensign Charles W. Satterlee tonight wed the girl he wooed in college, but could never get the nerve to propose to. His father proposed by proxy while Ensign Satterlee paced the deck of a destroyer in the North Atlantic.

Ensign Satterlee and Miss Jean Shiver, 21-years old were married in a ceremony at a Baptist church with only their families and a few close friends in attendance. The young naval officer will leave his bride Saturday to fly to New York and return to his ship.

"This is the first time I've been home since I left last December, and I don't know when I'll get back. Dad did a pretty good job on the proposal, and I don't see any need to quit him now," Satterlee said as he dressed for his wedding.

"It wasn't as much lack of nerve as it was lack of time. After all—I only had 10 days between the time I took my naval commission last December until I was on my way to sea. I just kept putting off proposing until I had to beat it."

Ensign Satterlee wrote his father, George Satterlee, from the North Atlantic and asked him to propose. The elder Satterlee bought a ring, but needed the moral support and verbal prompting of the boy's mother in getting Miss Shiver's acceptance. The bride said she would quit her job as a clerk and wait in Kansas City "for the duration of the national emergency" while her husband gives his time to the Navy.

Labor for State Service

Reorganization of labor for State rvice under emergency conditions as one of the schemes undertaken d left by the late Konoye Cabinet st before its withdrawal from office. he late Cabinet at its meeting on ugust 29 decided on the central licy regarding labor, embodying ven specific points as objectives of e new labor administration. These re emphasis on the spirit of labor r State service, adjustment of dis- ibution of labor, promotion of oc- upational shiftings and change- vers, extension of registration of ational labor, innovation and more fectual control of labor, organization f labor for State service, adequate rovision of houses for labor, fuller operation among private labor or- anizations.

Along the fundamental lines enu- erated above, special emphasis is to e laid, as a program for the cur- ent year, on the following four oints. First, enlistment of person- el to meet the need of necessary artime industries, encouragement of roductive undertakings under the urrent industrial expansion program, romotion of transportation and com- unication enterprises and civil en- ineering for defense. Second, con- entration of labor at industrial lants of major importance. Third, djustment of conditions for the gen- ral mobilization of national labor or State service. Fourth, extension f the mobilization of female labor.

The lines thus to be officially fol- owed clearly show the purport and rend of the labor and service ad- inistration newly proposed. First f all, labor and service are to be emanded, not from limited numbers r sections of society as in the past, ut from the general populace of the ountry as far as practicable. In the econd place, the labor force thus nustered is to develop its highest tate of efficiency in the interest of he State by concentration in indus- ries most important to the wartime xigencies of the country. In sum, he limited resources of labor are so irected as to achieve highest effi- iency and develop most utility for he interest of the State. This di- ection of labor is demanded by the mergency situation of the country.

It may be further noted that the dministration of labor and service n the above principles is to be di- ected from the two standpoints of rdinary and extraordinary work. The supply and demand of labor and ervice for the first category of work re to be managed much the same s labor has in the past been mobi- ized or distributed. For the second ategory of work, labor under the ew program is to be handled on he basis of short term and seasonal abor.

In the past, under ordinary con- itions of industry, what are now to e catalogued as extraordinary labor orces could be left to themselves without trouble or with hardly any ffect on the general condition of abor. However, now that all re- gular labor resources of the coun- ry have been tapped, fluid labor forces could no longer be left free r uncontrolled without giving rise o keen competitive bids for their work. It is also plain that unless this section of labor is controlled effectually, there would be no fluid labor to meet the emergency calls which industry sends out spasmodically.

The source of such fluid labor has been found in numbers of people other than those employed in industries of vital importance. This source of labor supply embraces the general populace of the country, including youths of college and school age. In point of fact such labor is chiefly to be drawn from such youths and people in general who have hitherto stood outside the province of labor in the hitherto accepted sense of the term. This is to be accomplished by development of what are to be known as corps of national labor for State service. And the number to be enlisted for such groups of labor and shifted from one line of work to another, as occasion arises, will no doubt run into tens of millions and the fields into which they will be sent for work will be multifarious. But the lines in which their service is most keenly demanded are construction and civil engineering for defense purposes, wartime industries and agriculture.

The present labor mobilization plan, as may be expected, includes female labor and service. But the ranks of female workers are to be chiefly formed by recruits from girls above certain grades of school. No call is to be sent to the other sections of the female population. The main idea is to reduce as far as possible demands on the service of young womanhood above a certain age, in view of the greater importance of their work in houses, which is regarded as their natural and legitimate field of activity.

Those to be enlisted in the corps of national labor for State service are men between 14 and 40 years of age and young women above 14 and below 25 years of age and unmarried. But even those who fail to fill these age qualifications may, if they wish, volunteer as effectives. The work allotted for these labor groups, as a matter of general principle, will be temporary and simple in character. The scope of work planned for them chiefly consists of military work related to the preparations of forces going out to military service, production of rice, wheat and other major foodstuffs, construction and civil engineering necessary for military or defense purposes, and relief work related to the general mobilization of men for the services. The term of labor, excepting in some unusual circumstances, is to be not more than 30 days in a year so that labor for State service should not interfere with regular occupational duties.

For efficiency and other reasons labor is to be employed in organized bodies. The men mustered for State service labor are to be formed in units each under its own leader. The organization of labor is to be ordered by the competent Minister of State whenever found necessary. The work itself of organization of labor is to be put in the hands of prefectural governors, city, town or village chiefs, or leaders of Youth Corps, as the occasion may be. In each instance of a labor call, the organized units are to be apprised through the leaders of what sort of work is demanded, where the work is to be and how long and so forth. The order from the Minister of State is to be issued whenever there is an application made for labor in State service and approved as such.

The leader who has been ordered by competent quarters to organize a group of men for State service labor is to proceed with his duties by selecting from the number under his direction such men as are most suitable for the work required or are most conveniently placed to answer the call. Age, occupation, experience, health, family circumstances and other things are to be considered in selection of service men, in order to secure smooth operations of the system and efficiency. For the labor rendered the men are to receive no compensation, true to the spirit of patriotic loyalty in which labor service is offered.

Fabrics Forty Pounds Per Capita

If fabrics of all kinds produced in the United States were divided evenly each person would receive between 40 and 45 pounds. The figures have stayed within these limits for half a century, the peak being for the years 1915 to 1919. For the last half-decade the figure was 40.9 pounds.

Cotton has maintained almost a fixed percentage of all fibers used, ranging between 70 and 72. Silk has averaged less than 2 and flax less than 1 per cent. Rayon did not exceed 1 per cent of the total until 1924, and reached 9 per cent in 1939. Cotton is used to make some kinds of rayon. The synthetic fibers made available by scientific research still have a long way to go before they replace natural fibers.—N.Y. Herald Tribune.

UNIVERSITY PRESIDENT STUDIES HOW TO KEEP U.S. OUT OF WAR

American Entry Into World Conflict Will Not Solve Problems—Roosevelt's Policy Assailed

By ROBERT M. HUTCHINS
President of the University of Chicago

We hear on every side that war is inevitable. We even hear that we are at war, and that there is nothing we can do about it.

Things look black. The President now calls for "total victory" over "the enemy" and urges upon us the determination to win.

Still there is a chance that these remarks are for foreign consumption and do not mean what they seem to mean. They seem to mean that the British, Chinese, and Greeks are our allies. If this is so, it is immoral to let them die for us while we sit safely at home. We should have been in the war from the start. We should fight now. And if we are actually to press on to total victory, we must fight. We are not justified in hoping that the Axis will suffer total defeat without full American participation in the war.

Two days after war broke out in Europe the President assured the nation that he would do everything he could to keep at peace. He has repeated these assurances again and again. Every speech he made during the campaign contained a pledge to keep the country out of war. The night before the election he said, "We propose and expect to continue our lives in peace." Recently he said, "Do not let us waste time reviewing the past or fixing or dodging the blame for it." I cannot believe that this means that he wants us to forget his promises to pursue a policy of peace.

Stand on Brink of War

Until we are engaged in military action, we must continue to hope that we can avoid the ultimate catastrophe. We stand on the brink of war, but we have not been attacked. The burden of proof rests on those who claim we are about to be at war. We have not lost the power to decide for peace or for war. We still have a chance to catch our breath, reflect a little, and take a last look around, before we plunge into the abyss.

The President is a democratic leader. One of his greatest qualities is his sense of responsibility to the people. If he is moving toward war, he must be doing it in the conviction that the people want him to. If this is his conviction, he is mistaken. The people have never had a chance to express themselves on the issue of war or peace. The election gave them no chance. Both parties declared for peace. Both candidates declared for peace.

No one should know better than Mr. Roosevelt that the newspapers are not always a reliable index of public opinion. Even if most of the newspapers are for war, it is no more significant than that only a third of them were for Mr. Roosevelt in 1936 and only a fifth of them in 1940.

The Gallup Poll shows that the people are for peace and that they trust Mr. Roosevelt to keep them at peace. The Gallup question published recently was, "If you were asked to vote on the question of the United States entering the war against Germany and Italy, how would you vote—to go into the war or to stay out of the war?" Eighty-three per cent of those asked said they would vote to stay out. The percentage voting to stay out was higher than it was a year ago.

On the other hand, when the question was "Do you favor aiding Britain at the risk of war?" the majority of those asked said "Yes". We can only infer that the people want peace and that, relying on Mr. Roosevelt's promises of peace, they have been willing to help Britain at the risk of war. The risk of war, with Mr. Roosevelt at the helm, was too slight to worry about.

Peace Wanted

The country was to defend itself, aid Britain, and stay out of war. We have been told over and over again that we could do just that. During the hearings and debates on the Lease-Lend Bill man after man announced that this was a bill to keep the country out of war. Mr. Willkie said that that was why he was for it. Senator George, who led the fight for the bill, said that that was why he was for it. The passage of this bill gave the President no mandate for war. The people wanted peace.

If we go to war, what are we going to war for? Mr. Roosevelt tells us we are to save "the democracies". The democracies are, presumably, England, Greece, and possibly Turkey. Turkey is a dictatorship. Greece is a dictatorship. As to England, in 1928 Anthony Eden, now Foreign Secretary, speaking on behalf of a bill extending the suffrage, felt it necessary to say to the House of Commons, "We have not got democratic government in this country today. We never have had it, and I venture to suggest to the Honorable Members of the Opposition that we shall never have it. What we have done, in all the progress of reform and evolution of politics is to broaden the basis of our oligarchy".

There can be no doubt that the people of America prefer the government of Britain to the governments of its allies or its enemies. Britain is a constitutional state and has been the inspiration of many constitutional states. We prefer the governments of Greece and Turkey to those of the Axis, but we cannot use the word "democracy" to describe every country that is or may be at war with the Axis.

Future Policy

If we go to war, what are we going to war for? The British propose to defeat the Axis. What they propose to do then they do not say, and have repeatedly refused to say. Yet the United States is entitled to know. Are we to rush to arms every time the British Empire is in danger? If so, we are entitled to know what the future policy of the British Empire is to be. Are we to put down every tyrant that arises in Europe? If so, we are entitled to know what is to be done to keep each tyrant from being worse than the last.

If we go to war, what are we going to war for? The only specific statement that the President made on the course we are to pursue after the war is found in two sentences in his last speech. He said, "We believe that any nation, no matter how small, has the inherent right to its own nationhood." To the same effect he said, "There never has been, there isn't now, and there never will be any race of people fit to serve as masters over their fellow men." Do these statements imply the restoration of pre-war boundaries in Austria, Czechoslovakia, Memel, Danzig, Poland, France, and Rumania? Is this undertaking to be worldwide? If so, how do we induce the Soviets to restore the pre-war boundaries of Estonia Latvia, Lithuania, Finland, and Poland?

If we succeed in re-establishing these boundaries, how do we know they will last. The boundaries we helped to establish last time fell apart in 20 years. We tried to establish them on the same principle as the one the President proposes now: the principle of self-determination.

And what do we do about the countries which were victims of aggression before 1939? Is everybody who stole anything to give the stolen thing up? What do we do about Hongkong, the Malay States, the Dutch East Indies, French Indo-China, Africa, and above all, India? If there never has been, is not now, and never will be any race of people fit to serve as masters over their fellow men, how can we tolerate the mastery of the white race over our yellow, brown, and black fellow men throughout the world

Four Freedoms

If we go to war, what are we going to war for? We are stirred, but not enlightened, by the great phrase—the four freedoms—which the President has used as the general statement of our aims, freedom of worship, freedom of speech, freedom from want, and freedom from fear—if we go to war, we go to establish these four freedoms everywhere.

The President cannot literally mean that we are to fight on till the four freedoms ring everywhere. If we are to be responsible for the four freedoms everywhere, we must have authority everywhere. We must force the four freedoms upon people who might prefer to do without them, rather than accept them from the armed missionaries of the United States. This new imperialism, this revised conception of the White Man's Burden, this modern version of America's Manifest Destiny is a repudiation of the presidential teaching that there never has been, is not now, and never will be any race of people fit to serve as masters over their fellow men.

Of course, we must extend the four freedoms to our "allies" as well as to our "enemies." We must see to it that British possessions throughout the world have them. The hopes that were held out to India during the last war, only to end in disappointment, and that are held out again now, must be fulfilled. Greece and Turkey must reform too. In the Latin-American countries we shall have no easy task. Few of them have the four freedoms now. From Mexico to Patagonia we must send out our legions to convert our good neighbors by force of arms.

Path to War

The President cannot mean this, for it is a program of perpetual war, war in Latin-America, war in the Far East, war in the South Seas, and even war with Britain. Mr. Roosevelt must mean that by defeating the Axis we shall rid the world of the governments which are at present most aggressive in their attack on the four freedoms. During or after the war we shall have to figure out the next steps: how to establish and maintain governments that believe in our four freedoms. The first step is war. Here, then, is the real issue: is the path to war the path to freedom?

This war, if we enter it, will be long, hard, and bloody. We do not have the choice between a short war abroad and a prolonged period of militarization at home. The "enemy" now controls all of Europe and part of Asia, and is not yet driven from Africa. We have no evidence that the totalitarian regimes will fly to pieces when their opponents get superiority in the air, or even that superiority can be achieved.

Total war for total victory against totalitarian states can best be conducted by totalitarian states. The reason is simple. A totalitarian state is nothing but a military machine. A totalitarian state will be more effective in war than any other kind of state. A democratic state is organized for the happiness of its citizens. But their happiness cannot be considered in total war. Every one of them must become a cog in the military machine. If the United States is to proceed through total war to total victory over the totalitarian states, it will have to become totalitarian, too.

Is total war, then, the path to freedom? We seek freedom from want, and we impoverish ourselves. We seek freedom from fear, and we terrorize ourselves. We seek freedom of worship and freedom of speech and we suppress them.

Clear Reason

And when total victory has been won, will the totalitarian administrations end? We may find a clue in England. A responsible member of the British Cabinet, Sir Archibald Sinclair, publicly supports a proposal that there shall be no election in England for three years after the war. The reason is clear. Poverty and disillusionment will make democracy dangerous.

What will be America's fate after a long, hard, and bloody war? In times of peace we have had 10,000,000 unemployed; we shall have at least that many again. We shall have an enormous debt. Repudiation and inflation may rid us of that—and at the same time of the middle class.

Having exhausted our resources in getting guns, we shall have none for butter, houses, relief, social security or education. We shall have want and fear, and we may have the maintenance of order by a Government scarcely distinguishable from those which we went forth to fight. We may have the kind of freedom proclaimed by one of Napoleon's marshals to the German towns. He said, "My friends, I bring you perfect liberty. But be prudent. I shoot the first man who stirs."

There are those who say, "Of course, if we go to war, we shall have totalitarianism in this country." Lord Halifax recently said that Chancellor Hitler could never invade England. If he can never invade England, he can never conquer the Western Hemisphere. We in America have a chance to save democracy if we build our defenses and stay at peace. If we enter upon total war to total victory, we lose that chance, even if we win the victory.

American Nihilists

War, except in self-defense, is a counsel of despair, despair because the world is bad, despair because peaceful change is too slow and hard. It was the counsel of nihilists, the Russian revolutionaries described by Dostoyevsky. They believed in progress by catastrophe. Our modern American nihilists want catastrophe because they despair of getting progress in any other way. They think that everything will be wonderful after the war because such things as capitalism, which they dislike, will be destroyed.

I think it is fairly certain that capitalism will not survive American participation in this war, and since it is the vehicle of the materialism that has brought us to our present pass, I am not altogether sure that it deserves to. However, experience after the last war in German, Italy, and the Soviets does not suggest that catastrophe is the road to something better.

The trouble with the doctrine of progress through catastrophe is that you can be sure of the catastrophe, but not of the progress. So of war as the path to freedom. You can be certain of the war. The freedom is another matter. If we enter this war, we shall lose what we have of the four freedoms. We shall lose the hope of realizing them. What we have, in this country, is hope. War, for the country, is a counsel of despair. It is a confession of failure. It is national suicide.

We have far surpassed most other nations in our advance toward the four freedoms. We and we alone have the hope of realizing them. We must show the world a nation which understands, values, and practices the four freedoms. This is America's destiny.

Battle for Liberty

We cannot run away from our destiny because it is hard. We cannot avoid it by claiming that we must have the British fleet to protect us. We cannot evade it by pleading fatigue from our futile efforts to meet the depression, suggesting that we would like an ocean voyage to recuperate. We cannot be like Stendhal's hero, who at the age of 16 ran away to join Napoleon to escape from the sorrows of prisoners has risen to roughly 3.6 million. It is ridiculous if any British blockhead says this figure is not confirmed. If German military authorities compile a figure, it is correct. It is as correct as our statements on the numbers of French and British prisoners. Assuming that in Russia, as this is also the case with us, the number of wounded is three or four times as large as that of the dead, we reach a figure of an absolute loss of at least 8 to 10 million soldiers, not counting the ones who are only lightly wounded so that they can be healed and sent to the front once more.

Believe It or Not, by Ripley

My party members! No army in the world can recover from such losses. The Russian army cannot do it either. The booty we took in this time is enormous. More than 15,000 airplanes, 22,000 tanks and 27,000 guns have been destroyed or captured. This material is truly enormous. The world's entire industry including our own, could only gradually replace this material. The industries of the Democracies will certainly not replace it in the course of the next years.

I am coming to our territorial gains. So far we have occupied 1,670,000 square kilometers. This is an area three or four times the size of France and about five times that of England. In this territory 60 to 75 per cent of all industries and raw materials of Soviet Russia are located. Within a short while a few further operations will be concluded by which we shall intensify the slow process of strangulation.

The achievement of our infantry on their advance into Russia is without a parallel in the course of history. It is naturally easier to march from Dunkirk to Ostend and then to withdraw from Ostend to Dunkirk. But other distances must be coverd if one marches from Germany's frontiers to Rostov, Crimea or to Leningrad, particularly if one takes into consideration the quality of the roads in this "paradise of the workers and peasants." I have never yet used the word "Blitzkrieg" because it is an idiotic word. If it can be applied to any campaign at all, however, it can be applied to this one. Never yet has such a gigantic country been defeated and crushed in less time than it happened in Soviet Russia. It was only possible thanks to the unbelievable achievements and the spirit of sacrifice of our German armed forces. Behind their front there is a second one, the German Fatherland.

In Occupied Countries

In the occupied countries our soldiers always behave politely and decently toward the civilian population, perhaps too decently sometimes. Our armies will never use force against the civilian population. No German soldiers ever committed any acts of theft or robbery. Punishment for such crimes is more severe than it would be in Germany. In this manner we are protecting the civilian population. If some people believe, however, that they can rebel against the occupation or shake it by murder and acts of violence, we shall clamp down as we have learned to do it in the years when our opponents thought they could terrorize us. In the end we have mastered their terror.

The silliest hopes are entertained by some people, namely that a revolt, a revolution, would break out in Germany. The people who could start a revolution are no longer with us. They emigrated to England, to the United States and to Canada a long time ago. I have often been a prophet in my life. I have always been ridiculed, but I have always been right. Here is my next prophecy: The experience of November, 1918, will not be repeated, cannot be repeated in Germany. Everything is imaginable, but not that Germany would ever capitulate. If our enemies say, "In this case the war will last till 1952," I can tell them that no matter how long it will last the last battalion in the battlefield will be a German one.

American Threats

It is altogether useless to try to intimidate me. You know that often I do not speak of something for days, months and even years. This does not mean that I am not paying any attention to or recognizing a situation. If today by the United States in particular new menaces are again and again uttered against Germany, I can say that I envisaged this development already more than a year ago when I declared: Whatever ship will bring war material to Great Britain, material that is sent to kill German soldiers and civilians, will be torpedoed. (Immense applause) If President Roosevelt who already bears the responsibility for Poland's entering this war and who, as we can prove by documents, persuaded France to enter this war, believes that he can soften us by ordering his navy to shoot, I can only give one answer to this gentleman: President Roosevelt has ordered his ships to open fire on German ships at sight, and I have ordered German ships when they see American ones—not to fire upon them but to defend themselves as soon as they are attacked. A German officer who does not defend himself will be court martialled.

If an American boat according to the order of its President opens fire, it will do so at its own risk. The German boat will defend itself and our torpedoes will hit their mark. I do not intend to waste any time on Roosevelt's ridiculous falsifications, such as the one that German experts had drawn a certain map for me. I can only tell Mr. Roosevelt that in certain fields I do not need any experts. My own head is enough for me. I need no brain trust to support me. I am no high school student either who is drawings maps for his homework. South America is as far from my sphere of interest as the moon. Roosevelt's assertion of this connection are of the silliest kind.

Treatment of Religion

Let us examine his second assertion that we intend to destroy all religion in the world. I am now 52 years old and have something else to do than to busy myself with childish antics. In Germany we are of the opinion that everybody is to go to heaven in whichever way he thinks best. I have read that in the United States there are priests who are preaching against the State, and that soldiers are forbidden to attend such sermons. The situation is exactly the same as in our country, only with the difference that in Germany the various denominations are receiving almost 900 million marks per year from the Government while in the United States they do not receive a cent. No priest has ever been persecuted in Germany because of his religious belief, but only when abandoning religious principles he interfered in affairs of the state. Only very few priests have ever indulged in such activities. An overwhelming majority is behind the German Government in this fight. They know exactly that if this struggle were lost for Germany, religion, under Stalin's protectorate, would fare worse than under ours.

All efforts to influence the German people from without are childish and ridiculous.

Fervent Protagonists

There will be the most fervent protagonists of the National Socialist movement who will return from the front having witnessed the results of 23 years of Communism and having compared them with our achievements. They will be able to judge what National Socialism has accomplished and what Europe would be facing if that other world remained victorious. They understand our great aims. By our fight we are finally removing the danger from Europe's East and making sure that this East with its immense fertility, with its immeasurable riches of raw materials and ores will no more be mobilized against Europe but will be placed in Europe's service. I feel entitled to claim that I am taking an impartial view in these matters. I draw a line between the Frenchmen and their Jews, between the Belgians and their Jews and between the Dutch and their Jews. I know that innumerable people are living in Russia who are the victims of Europe's crazy organization according to which its richest part is continuously mobilized against Europe while its people have an unimaginably low standard of living. Our soldiers have seen it with their own eyes: In a country where the soil abounds with fertility, in a country in which a fraction of the efforts needed elsewhere would produce ample harvests, people hardly own cooking utensils of their own, are living in miserable hovels, in utter destitution, dirty and vermin-ridden. It will be a real liberation for Europe when not only this danger disappears, but when the fertility of this soil can be placed at Europe's disposal. And if the honorable Mr. Willkie declares, there are only two possibilities: That either Berlin will become the capital of the world or Washington, I can only state:

Berlin does not want to become the capital of the world and Washington will never play that role either. Our great aim in the East is at bottom only the last logical step in our program which the National Socialist movement set itself as its task. It is a sober program which places human work and man himself in the center of acting, endeavor and striving. To the conception of gold and capital we opposed that of man, countryman and work and we are doing the same thing again today. All those are included in this program who today are fighting at our side as our allies, in the first place the state which is struggling with the same problems and perhaps still more difficult ones as Germany: Italy (great applause) The Duce, I know it, dose not feel differently about this war from the way we do. His country is poor, overpopulated, never had a break and does not know where the daily bread is to come from. He has entered a sworn alliance with me and this alliance will not be disrupted by any force on earth (renewed vigorous applause)

To Reach Aims Together

Fascism and National Socialism are two revolutions which began at different times in different forms but with the same aims. They will reach their aims together. A number of other European states have joined us. We can say that almost the entire European Southeast is today in our camp and that large parts of the rest of Europe are behind us at least in their convictions if not by declared acts of their Governments. Thus we are no longer fighting alone as National Socialists but in an immense European front. At the end of this year we can safely say that the greatest danger has already been removed by this European front. There can be no doubt that Europe's fate for the next one thousand years will be decided in this time. We can all be happy that we paved the way for this time and you, my friends of former years, you can be proud of it. Thus it is with still greater pride that we can approach the tombs of our old comrades in this year. There was something on our conscience which could make us uneasy last year. We were no longer fighting against the Red front. Fate had forced us to conclude an armistice with Communism. I had been sincere in concluding it but the other side has broken it. In 1918 we were robbed of victory. At that time we had sacrificed two million soldiers on the battlefields while more than 1½ million of our men had been wounded. In spite of our heroic efforts we were deprived of victory by the madness of a revolution in our home country. This was only the beginning, the first act of this drama. The second and the end are now being written and this time we shall make up for what has been taken away from us. (Stormy applause) The hour will come when we can stand before the graves of the dead of the Great War and tell them: "Comrades, you did not die in vain." What we once said before the monument erected to the dead of the National Socialist movement in Munich, we shall be still more justified in proclaiming before the graves of the dead soldiers of the World War. "You remained victorious, comrades."

Deeply moved and with growing enthusiasm the old member of the National Socialist Party listened to the final words of the Fuehrer's speech. Now the tension was released in an immense ovation for the Fuehrer who gave expression to Germany's unshakeable belief in the certainty of its victory.

To Help Busy Farmers

The Dai Nippon Youth Corps, of which Education Minister Kunihiko Hashida is president, Monday sent a party of 120 young girls belonging to the Corps, to Chiba, Saitama and Kanagawa, the three adjacent prefectures of Tokyo to let them render their helping hands to farmers who are going through the busiest season of the year for harvesting. Several other parties consisting of young girls also will be sent to these prefectures in a few days. The party will be divided and sub-divided into minor groups and penetrate 20 different farming villages to look after the families of farmers, who leave their small boys and girls at home while at work on the field. The little ones will be placed under the care of these girls. The picture shows the vanguard leaving the Shiba Girls' Hall for the destinations. The party will come back here next Tuesday.

Newspapers in India Classified by Writer

other hand, are independent of British influence except in a few cases where for political and party reasons the latter are allied with the British press. The Leader of Allahabad which belongs to the Liberal Party, the Indian Nation of Patna which belongs to His Highness the Maharaja of Darbhanga, and the Standard of Bombay which belongs to some leading businessmen, are among the Indian-owned papers which take their inspiration from the Anglo-Indian press. The rest of them have done tremendous service to the nation, and have always tried to maintain the independence of the press.

Some of the leading Indian-owned daily papers are, the Hindu, the Indian Express, the Swadesha Mitran and the Andhra Patrika of Mahras; the Amrita Bazar Patrika, the Yugantar, the Ananda Bazar Patrika, the Basumati, the Hindusthan Standard, the Star, and the Viswamitra of Calcutta; the Nation and Search Light of Bihar; the National Herald, the Leader, the Bharat, the Pratap and the Aj of the United Provinces; the Hindusthan Times, the Tej, the Hindusthan and the National Call of Delhi; the Tribune, the Pratap and the Milap of Lahore; the Sind Observer, and the Gazette of Karachi; the Chronicle, the Sentinel, the Samachar and the Standard of Bombay; the Kesar and the Maharatta of Poona; the Daily News and the Hitawada of Nagpur; the Bulletin of Hyderabad (Deccan), and the Tainadu of Bangaloe.

Journalism in Infancy

The total number of Indian newspapers are about 2,500, of which 150 are dailies. Considering the United States of America which has 35,000 newspapers of which 2,300 are dailies, the Indian newspaper journalism is still in its infancy. Yet, some of the papers like the Hindu of Madras, the Amrita Bazar Patrika and the Ananda Bazar Patrika of Calcutta, have been striving to come up to required standard, and of them the first-named paper is having a leading place in Indian newspaper journalism.

Another important classification of Indian-owned papers is with regard to their language. They are the English language papers and the Indian language papers. The number of Indian language papers is increasing year after year, while the English language ones are remaining steady. There being about a dozen leading languages in India, each with a vast literature of its own and each spoken and written by at least 20,000,000 people, there are daily newspapers in all these languages. The leading Indian languages employed for newspaper purposes are the Hindi, Urdu, Bengali, Sindhi, Marathi, Gujrati, Burmese, Assamese Telugu, Tamil, Kanarese, Oriya and Malayalam.

One other feature of these languages is that each has a contiguous and clear-cut province of its own, such that it is very easy for the newspapers of each of these languages to reach its readers in seasonable quickness. The existence of various linguistic provinces has made for the periodical of any one language, other provinces useless for circulation, so much so the advertisers have to find 12 mediums instead of one, which makes it very expensive to advertise in India. There is a strong politico-linguistic movement going on in India for the adoption of one language for the whole of India which is bearing fruit already. The Hindi is selected as such.

Important Classification

One more important classification of Indian newspapers is with regard to their political complexion. Among the educated class, each has a strong bias for his own political belief, so much so in India people buy their newspapers according to their political trend. Indian newspapers are therefore grouped as Nationalist Press, Reactionary Press, Liberal Press, Communal Press, Zamindari Press, Princes' Press and the Anglo-Indian Press. The Extremist Press and the Moderate Press are sub-classifications among the Nationalist Press.

As an industry, only half a dozen of Indian-owned papers have yet proved a success. The others are always unsteady and uncertain. The Amrita Bazar Patrika is about 90 years old, and the Hindu is about 60 years old. Both are proving stable and respectable. Owing to an unsympathetic and anti-national government in the country the life of Indian-owned papers is an uphill task and full of hazards.

Y.C.A.C. IS BEATEN IN FOOTBALL GAME

But Wins Rugby From Omon Club Boys, 31 To 6

American football and rugby shared the limelight in the sports activities at the Yokohama Country and Athletic Club grounds Sunday afternoon, with the club players dropping a 17 to 16 decision to the Tokyo Old Boys in the U.S.A. code contest but winning the English game from the Omon Club, also of the capital, 31 to 6.

The Y.C. and A.C. second soccer team gained a 2 to 0 victory over the Yokohama Third Middle School eleven on Saturday afternoon at the club grounds, while in an intra-club basketball tilt following the soccer game the "Old Timers" nosed out "The Rest," 54 to 53, on the Y.C. and A.C. court.

The scheduled first team matches in soccer and hockey were not played as the opposition for both contests failed to make an appearance at the port city club.

Offers Strong Opposition

The Y.C. and A.C. American footballers put up unexpectedly strong opposition for the Tokyo Old Boys, whose squad consist in the main of former university players with plenty of experience. The home team, which included many beginners, trailed 17 to 0 as the third period ended, and its spirited rally in the final stanza almost resulted in a major upset.

Soon after the game got under way the visitors swept down the field on a sustained drive which ended with Kajitani reeling for the last 15 yards for a touchdown. Kasahara, former Meiji rugby star, sent the ball sailing between the uprights for the seventh point.

The O.B. squad kept up the pressure and near the end of the initial quarter Kasahara's powerful and accurate foot booted the pigskin over the crossbar from 25 yards out for a good placement. When the period ended the scoreboard still read 10 to 0.

The Y.C. and A.C. gridders made a much better showing in the second quarter. After Harriss had intercepted an O.B. pass on his own 30-yard line, he and Swanson made successive first downs. However, a fumble soon after robbed the homesters of a good chance to score. The line also began to function well, Agajan once breaking through to smear one of the visiting backs for an eight-yard loss.

Twice more during this stanza the losers made considerable yardage, but the opposition stiffened when the situation became somewhat dangerous. Neither side could score during this period.

Lost on 47

The Y.C. and A.C. ran back the O.B. kickoff after the interval to midway in their own territory. After making a first down the ball was lost on the O.B.'s 47. Kajitani's tricky running carried him to the home squad's 25 before he was downed. Then Kasahara and Kajitani worked a nice lateral play which brought the ball to their opponents' 6.

An offside on first down cost the Tokyo players five yards, but on the next play Kasahara was only a yard short of paydirt when he was grounded after an end run. Then on fourth down Nakahara knifed through the line to make a touchdown. Kajitani passed to Nakahara on a pretty fake kick play for the extra point, making the count 17 to 0. As the quarter ended the Y.C. and A.C. had the ball on the opposition's 47 with 7 yards needed in two downs to retain possession.

On the first play of the final canto Harriss made five yards around right end and then lateraled to Eastlake. The latter outran the linesmen and picked his way nicely through the secondaries to score after a good 40-yard run. Harriss plunged over for the additional point, making the score 17 to 7.

The homesters kept up the pressure and rolled down the field from their 47 to their rivals' 4, but lost the ball on downs six yards from the end zone. However, a bad snap resulted in a safety which made the count 17 to 9.

Swanson rushed back the ball to the O.B. 38 after the kickoff. After two passes were knocked down Harriss lateraled to Eastlake, and the latter carried the oval to the 21 before being forced out. Then Harriss called for another end run, and after making six yards he transferred to Planas who scored standing up. A conversion, Harriss diving over, reduced the Y.C. and A.C. deficit to one. The game ended two minutes later, giving neither side a chance to add to their totals.

The Old Boys had a good line and a fine backfield. With many substitutes available, a number of changes in the line-up were made, especially in the second half, so that all players would have a chance to participate in the fray.

Backs' Chance Little

With a number of linesmen Y.C. and A.C. squad playing for the first time, the backs had few chances in the first half. However, after the interval the line did well and the backfield showed great form.

Ken Oki, Okada, Takimoto and Ota were the officials, and handled their assignments most creditably.

The line-ups were as follows.

Tokyo O.B.: Takamoto, c.; Nishijima, rg.; Amikura, lg.; Inouye, rt.; Uno, lt.; Ota, re.; Nomura, le.; Shima, qb.; Noguchi, rh., Kasahara, lh.; Nakahara, fb.; Fukuda, fb.; Sawada, le.; Kajitani, lh.; Nishioka, lt.; Fujima, rt.; Hanaoka, c.; Sakaguchi, lh. and Kawashima, qb.

Y.C. and A.C.: G. Agajan, le.; S. Petroff, lt.; J. Boixo, lg.; H. Fernandes, lt.; J. W. Child, c.; W. Salter, rg.; E. Salter, lt.; D. Vorobiov, rt.; L. A. M. Frank, re.; G. R. Swanson, rt.; F. R. Harriss, qb.; E. Eastlake, lh.; J. J. Planas, rh. and H. Schoene, fb.

Favored with the wind behind them the Y.C. and A.C. rugby team piled up a 23 to 0 lead in the first half of its game with the Omon Club. In the second stanza the match was much closer, the winners only outscoring the opposition by 8 to 6.

The visitors started off with a rush after the opening whistle and pressed strongly for a few minutes King and Planas cleared with good kicks.

After six minutes the Y.C. and A.C. ruggerites got going and play shifted to the other side of the field and remained there for most of the initial half. In 10 minutes the home team drew first blood. The pack got the ball on the 25-yard stripe and heeled back to the halves. Harriss made 10 yards and then passed to Jalenques who made the remaining 15 to score close to the poles. Planas' kick was true and the score became 5 to 0.

The next try came five minutes later on a fine passing movement. The homesters got the ball near midfield and the ball passed from Harriss to Stark and then to Jalenques, the last player touching down midway between the posts and the corner. Planas made a fine kick to boost the total to 10.

Three more tries before the interval, two by Planas and another by Jalenques, of which only one was not converted, gave the Y.C. and A.C. its 23 points.

The Omon players tried hard for a score and after nine minutes were awarded a penalty kick just inside their opponents' 25. The placement proved successful, giving the visitors three points.

The Tokyo team kept on applying the pressure and in less than five minutes had obtained a try, which made the count 23 to 6.

The Y.C. and A.C. then began to dominate the play again and scored about 12 minutes later. Harriss accepted an Omon kick near the center line and ran it back 10 yards, passing to Stark as he was tackled. The latter made another 10 and then transferred to Russell who outran the opposition and then cut in to place the ball between the posts. Planas made no mistake with the ensuing kick, and the scoreboard read 28 to 6.

Just before the final whistle the home team pack dribbled the ball down the field and W. Salter fell on the ball for a try, which remained uncovarted.

This victory was the Y.C. and A.C. rugby team's fifth in as many games this season. The squad has scored 192 points in these games and has had only 14 made against it.

P. H. Lord handled the whistle in his usual competent manner.

Playing for the Y.C. and A.C. were G. L. King; M. L. Russell, M. Jalenques, M. J. W. Stark, J. J. Planas; E. Salter, F. R. Harriss (captain); A. H. Ballantyne, F. J. Bond, L. A. M. Frank, W. Salter, A. A. Weiss, M. Weidenmann, G. Agajan and M. Pestalozzi.

The Y.C. and A.C. second soccer team remained unbeaten and united this season by downing the Yokohama Third Middle School, 2 to 0, in its fourth match this fall.

The club players had a hard fight on their hands and the students nearly scored several times. However, the stout defense of the Fachtmann brothers, George and Max, combined with the fine goaltending of Eymard, blanked the opposition.

Neither side could score by the halfway mark. Rau got the first goal after 15 minutes had elapsed in the second stanza, and Gordes assured the homesters of a victory by netting just before the end.

Captain A. G. Stevens was the impartial arbiter.

The Y. C. and A. C. line-up consisted of E. Eymard, G. R. Fachtmann, M. V. Fachtmann, C. Heseltine, J. A. Dixon (captain), C. G. Stanbury, A. Heck, R. Rau, E. L. Gordes, G. E. Beatty and F. Agajan.

The basketball game between the "Old Timers" and "The Rest" was every bit as close as the 54 to 53 score indicates. The game was a see-saw affair in which the lead changed hands several times.

The winners had a slim 26 to 23 lead at the interval, but the youngsters forged ahead soon after the teams changed sides. The veterans staged a good rally near the finish to just nose out their opponents.

Serge Bielous refereed the contest.

The players, their positions and individual scores follow:

"Old Times": J. J. Planas, rf., 18; G. E. Beatty, lf., 6; M. V. Fachtmann, c. 22; F. R. Harriss, lg., 8 and H. Schoene, rg.

"The Rest": E. Eymard, rf., 28; W. H. Blamey, lf., 6; R. Rau, c., 10; E. L. Gordes, rg., 3; J. Planas, lg., 6 and H. Fernandes, lg.

Hors de Combat

Giant Soviet tanks, which Stalin has been producing by the thousands for preparedness' sake, congest the roads, either strafed by the low-flying Luftwaffe or by the fast-advancing Wermacht. It would not be unreasonable to deduce that by looking at the formidable tank in the foreground which gives every proof of being unhurt that the Reds in their hurry to retreat left the steel behemoth intact before the Nazi troopers could pounce upon them.

LARGE OUTPUT SEEN BY GENERAL MOTORS

Corporation Ready to Double Present Defense Orders Worth $1,200,000,000

With orders for $1,200,000,000 worth of defense materials under way, the General Motors Corporation of the United States is ready to double these commitments, C. E. Wilson, president of the company, said at a press preview of preparedness units and 1942 cars at New Milford Proving Ground, according to a Detroit, September 10, report to the New York Herald Tribune.

An exhibition ranging from ball-bearings so small that a microscope was needed to see them to bombers, and an extensive demonstration of machine-guns trucks and warplanes in action, emphasized progress of the company's defense program.

"The production of the metal-working industries, or so-called durable goods industries, in the five pre-war years, averaged $18,000,000,000," Mr. Wilson said.

"The magnitude of the entire defense program is shown by the fact that it is now greater than the total average production of this five-year period for peace-time durable goods requirements of the country.

Cites Biggest Undertaking

"From this it will be readily seen that the defense program is big business, the biggest undertaking ever attempted by any nation, and bigger than the whole manufacturing business of the country in the past.

"To get the job done properly, it must be handled by executives, engineers and mechanics reasonably experienced in planning, purchasing and material control and production of this type of material.

"The least dislocation of employment and general disorganization of industry will occur, if the defense business is allotted to corporations in their capacity and ability to produce similar products and taking into consideration the number of employes available to their organizations."

Mr. Wilson urged that small manufacturing businesses receive as large a part as possible in speeding the defense output, through the allocation of subcontracts. He said the little companies are the natural suppliers of the larger corporations and will have an important influence on production.

"We, in General Motors, are also anxious about our business, our organization of 300,000 men and women, our dealers, the cut in passenger cars, business which will force us to lay off or transfer to other work 100,000 people within the next six months," he said.

"In other words, big business has its headaches and difficulties as well as small business, though this fact may not be generally recognized.

"Fortunately, the industry of the country was not taxed to capacity by the average production of the five pre-war years, and it should be possible to make good on the defense program and still have enough production of durable consumer goods to maintain a reasonable standard of living."

Mr. Wilson told how the company's participation in the defense program has mounted from $43,700,000 production in the fourth quarter of 1940 to a potential $160,000,000 output in the fourth quarter of 1941.

Labor Supply a Problem

"If the supplying lanes can be kept open and certain raw materials can continue to be imported, the final limitation of production of defense materials and consumer goods will undoubtedly be the supply of labor available," he declared.

The more than 300 newspaper men were welcomed by Alfred P. Sloan jr., chairman of General Motors, who spoke at a dinner recently.

"I hope that we can make plain the great difficulties that industry is having in passing from one type of productivity to the other," said Mr. Sloan. "Too many people lack fundamental understanding of what industry has to do, and it is very important that we keep the good will of the people at large in this great national undertaking in which industry must play a large part. We wish to have a comprehensive understanding of what is involved in some of these defense projects and what it means."

The difference between orders on hand and what is being produced was stressed by O. E. Hunt, executive assistant to the president of General Motors.

"Actually, this job of starting to produce radically different defense products is equivalent to starting new business, and with new products, new machine tools, new jigs and fixtures and, in many cases, new buildings and organizations," he said.

Savings on Materials Seen

C. L. McCuen, vice-president in charge of engineering, said production curtailment and substitution of materials will effect a savings of materials in General Motor production this year.

Emphasizing that the new cars are of a quality equal to that of any previous years and warning his hearers not to "buy any stock in a greencheese factory—we haven't used any of it in this year's cars," Mr. McCuen added that the 7.6 pounds of aluminum used in the 1941 model cars has been cut to 1.8 pounds for the 1942 models, a saving of 14,148,000 pounds.

The use of magnesium has been cut 89 per cent and nickel 53 per cent, he said, although lead and copper will be used 6 per cent more.

"Some people may be critical of the automobile industry for bringing out new models at this time," he said. "The question is asked: Why didn't we just continue with what we were producing? The answer is that we could not have effected the savings in materials needed for the defense program without important design changes.

"Whenever we are privileged to introduce to you our next new models, whether it will be in 1944 or 1945, you will see many changes. There will be the use of plastics increased; 100 octane fuel will be a general thing after the war; synthetic materials will be more general use, and we will learn many things from this emergency."

Realistic war scenes were presented when an Airacobra airplane, capable of a speed of 400 miles an hour, darted from behind a cloud and swooped low toward the crowd. Dive-bombing tactics were enacted, and the onlookers had fleeting glimpses of the cannon and machine-guns that protruded from the lean, gray nose of the craft, which was powered by an Allison motor.

There was a display of the importance of Army trucks by six-wheel-drive vehicles. These units climbed a 60-per-cent grade without the least hesitation. Some idea of the traction required was provided when a spectator attempted to walk up the same strip and failed, tumbling to the bottom of the declivity.

Proficiency in machine-gun technique caused the onlockers to gasp as two workers from the plant at Sagenaw, while blindfolded, assembled one of the pieces of ordnance in 45 seconds. A rapid burst of gunfire closed this presentation.

Jim Carney, English Ex-Boxing Champ, Dies in London Hospital at Age of 84

United Press

LONDON, September 10.—Jim Carney, former lightweight boxing champion of England, died in a hospital here last night. He was 84 years old.

Jim Carney was a picturesque figure of the bare knuckle days of prizefighting. His fight with Jack McAuliffe, the Irish world champion in 1887 at Revere, Massachusetts (near Boston) has gone down in ring history as one of the most exciting battles of modern times.

Carney and McAuliffe fought in a barn for stakes of $4,500 a side. They hammered each other for 74 rounds without either gaining a perceptible advantage. After five hours of trading blows, relieved only when Carney jumped out of the ring to punch two annoying spectators, the fighters were ready to call it a draw.

"Modern boxers," Carney said once, looking back over his career, "are not villainous enough. They haven't the jaws and the ears."

The jaws and ears of even the heroes of his day, however, did not always come up to his standards. Jimmy Highland, one of his opponents, died of the battering which Carney gave him in an English fight broken up by police. Carney was tried for manslaughter and convicted. He had to serve six months at hard labor.

Many of Carney's fights went to 30 or 40 rounds. His last battle, against Isaak Jacobs, lasted 37 rounds. They fought for stakes of $500 a side.

British Police Confiscate 2,000 Communist Leaflets and Arrest Two Communists

Transocean

BANGKOK, November 4.—A secret communist headquarters in Singapore was raided by police, according to information from the British city this morning.

The British police there confiscated 2,000 communist leaflets and arrested two communists.

The leaflets, which are drawn up in the style of the Third Internationale, described Singapore as the symbol of British imperialism in the Far East.

Simultaneously it was reported that the British authorities in Malaya have for some time been actively fighting the growing communist influence in the British crown colony and in the Federated Malay States.

On charges related to communist activity, a man was sentenced by the court at Singapore to three and one half years in prison and a Malay woman to three months in jail.

Another Malay was sentenced to six months in prison for belonging to the illegal Communist Party.

With Setsuko Hara in the starring role, "Orina Kyoshi no Kiroku" (Diary of a Woman Teacher) goes into production at the Tokyo studio of the Toho under direction of Takeshi Sato. The story was written by Fumiko Hirano, a national school teacher, based on her long experience in classrooms, and the screen version was arranged by Toho.

Nikkatsu has acquired the right of filming a melodrama entitled "Nogamo wa Nogamo" (Wild Duck is Wild Duck) by Hisatoshi Fukuoka, which made a big hit last spring when it was staged in Tokyo by the Todo modern-school dramatic troupe. The shooting of the picture will commence immediately after the completion of "Jiro Monogatari" (The Tale of Children) at the Tamagawa studio under direction of Koji Shima.

Among the new motion pictures which have been decided by the Education Ministry to be unfit for showing before children under the age of 14 are "Taiyo Sensei" (Teacher) by Shinko, "Okusama Goran" (Look, Madam!) by Nakamura Eiga, and "Shinkon Ura Omote" (Behind the Scenes of a New Marriage) by Toho.

Twenty screen players, including nine actresses, have completed their course at the training institute at the Tamagawa studio of the Nikkatsu recently. They will start their activities in stardom in the near future.

A prize winning story called "Imon Bukuro" (Comfort Bag) by Michio Ito has been filmed by the motion picture section of the Osaka Mainichi-Tokyo Nichi Nichi as an educational picture. The complete cast consists of Katsuhiko Sawa, Shinji Nakamura, Teruo Kihara, Michio Taniguchi, Hidehiko Miyo, Tadao Iwamoto, Jiro Watanabe, and Kenzo Asada.

For the first week of December, five feature motion pictures produced recently by the five leading Japanese film producers will be released on local screens. They are "Genroku Chushingura" (The Tale of 47-Ronin) by Shochiku, "Kawanakajima no Kassen" (the Battle at Kawanakajima) by Toho, "Yedo Saigo no Hi" (the Last Day of Yedo) by Nikkatsu, "Maiagaru Jonetsu" (Burning Passion) by Shinko, and "Haha to Senjo" (Mother and Fighting Front) by Daito.

Mitsuko Ichimura, Chiyoko Fumiya, Yaeko Izumo and Chiyeko Kyoya have been added to the cast of "Joi no Kiroku" (Diary of a Woman Doctor), a melodrama now in production by the Ofuna studio of the Shochiku Motion Picture Company. Hiroshi Shimizu is the director. Kinuyo Tanaka takes the feminine lead.

A preview of three culture features will be held at the auditorium of the Mitsukoshi department store, Nihonbashi, at 1 p.m. and 3 p.m. Saturday under the joint auspices of the Japan Eigasha and Japan Cultural Central League. Those to be screened include "Nadare" (Avalanche) by Jujiya, "Sakyu" (Sandhill) by Toho, and "Shima" (Islands) by Riken.

Largely because of the contemplated amalgamation of dramatic picture producing companies into three, the production of new films has decreased to a considerable extent. According to an investigation, applications for obtaining censorship approval before the shooting of firms during the past four months totaled only 71, less than half of the production quota, of which 18 pictures were voluntarily dropped from production.

The circuit performance of motion pictures sponsored by the Toho Eiga in the past 12 months totaled 848, which were given at various villages and industrial districts throughout the country. Attendance aggregated 694,121 persons. Encouraged by this remarkable result, the Toho will enlarge its plans next year in cooperation with various cultural, industrial, mining and other public associations.

"Tsushintaiki" (War Diary of Telegraph Corps), a Shinko film recently completed under direction of Sadao Imamura, is now being edited by Junichiro Aojima. The story was written by Captain Yamaguchi.

Stimulated by the growing Pacific problem, the Nikkatsu has plans for "Umi no Shiganhei" (Voluteers of the Sea), tentative title of an original story by Ryuji Nagami, having decided to make the picture of it. The valiant fighting spirit of the Japanese Navy will be pictured in the film, and the emphasis is to be given to the defense of the sea. Under grand-scale support of the Ministry of the Navy, the pictures will be made early next spring with Masanori Igayania directing.

Tomu Uchida, who is famous for his direction in the production of "Tsuchi" (Earth) at the Nikkatsu studio some time ago, has returned from Central and South China, where he was sent last August to bring back material for the background of a recording film about the China affair. The production on this film is being planned by the Japan Eigasha, and will shortly be started under Mr. Uchida's direction.

Of 275 applicants at the second examination of the Japan Motion Picture Association held in accordance with the motion picture law, only 53 persons have been qualified as screen players. It is interesting to note that Ennosuke Ichikawa, noted Kabuki actor, and his son, Danshiro, are among those who have passed the examination. Those who succeeded in the examination for directors totaled only 10 out of 48 applications. In the case of 65 applications for obtaining licenses as cameramen, only 14 persons have been successful.

A sequel of "Aino Ikka" (A Family of Love), a Nikkatsu feature film, which won the Yamanaka prize and was endorsed by the Education Ministry as an excellent production, will be produced by the Tamagawa studio under direction of Masahisa Haruhara, who produced the first picture. Kensuke Tatekawa is now working on the script.

With Mitsuko Mito as the feminine lead, the Ofuna studio of the Shochiku Motion Picture Company has commenced the shooting of "Kaze Kaoru Niwa" (A Garden of Fragrant Breeze). Toichi Toki, newcomer to Shochiku, has been assigned to the leading male role. The theme of the picture was taken from an original story titled "Sonbaiki" (A Village Plum Tree) by Atsu Shirakawa.

Much attention is being focussed on the completion of two films, which are now in production at the culture picture section of Toho. One is "Kogen Nogyo" (Tableland Agriculture) under support and instruction of the Agriculture and Forestry Ministry. "Kimi Wa Sojusha ni Nareruka" (Could You Become a Pilot?) is the title of the other, which deals with aviation science.

Miyeko Takamine, one of the Shochiku star actresses, recently proceeded to Kyoto. She has been borrowed from Shochiku by Koa Eiga for an important feminine role in "Genroku Chushingura" (The Loyal Retainers of the Genroku Era), a picture now in production at Kyoto.

Tokyo Gekijo Runs Story of 47 Ronin fans consider him as their own, the actor should present a farewell performance and make his entry to Osaka or anywhere else just as brilliant and big an affair as possible, instead of "sneaking" in as he was criticized at that time.

Danjuro the 8th discovered some "tricks" that lured him to Osaka in which his father (heavy in debt) was the prime mover. He could not very well drive his father into further misery by stubbornly refusing to perform; yet he could not sacrifice his professional pride and dignity. He takes the only course left and kills himself in his room on the night (August 6) before the opening day of his appearance at the age of 32.

He was so popular and his death so deeply mourned by all that after his tragic death there appeared more than 300 different "death" pictures of his and several books devoted to his life. The story is well dramatized.

These three plays, all more or less of sober nature, leave, however, refreshing after taste; worth while spending an evening.

The curtain rises at 4 p.m. daily.

At Girls' Sports Meet

The Third Tokyo City National School Gymnastic Council was held at the stadium of the Meiji Shrine Outer Garden Wednesday. The event was opened with a greeting of Mayor Tomejiro Okubo, president of the convention, which was followed by a series of gymnastics, martial arts, sports, relay-race, national defense sport contests and others. Inter-school races of various kinds also were staged. The picture shows a picked group of 740 girl students from many schools exhibiting prescribed forms of "naginata," or halberd, handling under the direction of Mrs. Chiyo Ito, instructor of the martial art. The program was carried through without a hitch till 3 p.m. when the function ended.

abilities. "Toge no Ishibotoke" (A Stone Buddha at the Mountain Pass), by Kohei Takeda, a drama which gained honorable mention in the recent contest of new plays judged by the Kabuki drama investigation committee, will be presented. In addition, "Nozaki-mura" (Omitsu's Tragedy) and "Omori Hikoshichi" (Hikoshichi's Valor), two classical dramas, are expected to be produced. The cast will include Ebiso Ichikawa, Somegoro Ichikawa, Shinsui Nakamura, Shikan Nakamura, Kikunosuke Onoye, Kuroyemon Onoye and Fukusuke Nakamura.

Michiko Oye and her co-players who have been playing at the Shochikuza since early this month, will revise the program completely from tomorrow. The new bill includes "Rinne" (Buddhist Karma) by Juzo Riku, "Samurai Jinrikisha" (Rikishaman) by Motohachi Katsushika, "Chugoku Onna Keikan" (Woman Police) by Ken Sasaki, and "Kokoku no Tsuchi" (the Earth of Fatherland) by Koichi Sakamoto.

"Yomigayeru Tsuchi" (Freshened Earth), a new play by Teisuke Ito, opened a five-day engagement yesterday at the Kokumin Shin Gekijo, Tsukiji, with actors and actresses of the Shochiku National Drama League playing. The current performance was specially arranged in celebration of the first anniversary of the League's founding.

Denmei Suzuki and Akira Matsudaira will be the featured players at the Tokiwaza, Asakusa Park, in collaboration with members of the Warai no Okoku dramatic company starting Saturday. The program consists of four new plays: "Jinsei Tozan" (Life Climbing), "Sekai no Hatemade" (To the End of the World), "Shanhai" (Shanghai), and "Mompei Gojusan-tsugi" (a Merry-Making Journey).

Yoshiko Inouye will make her first solo performance at the auditorium of the Imperial Aeronautical Society building, Shiba, at 7 p.m. Saturday. Ten dancers will be staged, including "Akino Shi" (Poem of Autumn), "Mizubenite" (At the Brook), "Umi no Otome" (Maiden of the Sea) and "Denen no Uta" (Song of Farmyard). Inouye is one of the popular dancers at the dance school under direction of Seiko Takata.

Noriko Awaya left Tokyo recently for a circuit performance in Chosen. She is expected to return to the capital on November 22.

A party of stage players organized by the Takarazuka Company has gone to Nagoya last week. They will play at the leading cities and towns in Aichi Prefecture until November 29.

The first performance of the Gojo Buyokai, a group of the star dancers under direction of Tamami Gojo, will be presented at the Gunjin Kaikan, Kudan, at 5:30 p.m. November 18. Eight dances, interesting and new to the stage, will be performed by Tamami in the leading role.

The Seido dramatic troupe will play at the Kokumin Shin Gekijo on November 30 and December 1 to present its fourth performance. Two plays will make up the program. They are "Hiko Shonentachi" (Flying Boys) by Harundo Shimada, and "Namake Ari to Rinde" (Lazy Ants and Linder) by Fuyuhiko Hayashi.

Under the support of the Society for International Cultural Relations, members of the Toho dancing team headed by Kaoru Tachibana left Tokyo last week for French Indo-China, where they will visit several leading places to entertain Japanese soldiers as well as to make public performances at Hanoi, Saigon and Haiphong. Their repertoire program includes "Utsukushiki Nippon" (Beautiful Japan), "Ryukyu Shoto" (Islands in Okinawa Prefecture), "Nippon Minyoshu" (Collection of Japanese Ballads), and "Odoru Tokyo" (Tokyo Melody).

For five days from November 19, the leading members of the Hanaygi dance school will take over the Kokumin Shin Gekijo to present the third performance. The curtain will rise at 6 p.m. daily while three matinees will be given at 1:30 p.m. on November 21, 23.

The stage players of the Japan Theatrical League, who have been playing in Hokkaido to visit industrial districts there since the latter part of October, will conclude their itinerary Sunday and return to the capital in the middle of next week.

In celebration of the 10th anniversary of the founding, the Shimada juvenile dance society will present an extra performance at the Hibiya Public Hall at 5 p.m. November 16.

To entertain Japanese soldiers in North China, a party of vaudeville performers organized by the Shochiku Company will leave Tokyo Saturday for a tour of the Continent, where they will make a 45-day sojourn.

Yoshio Kawada and his own dramatic group known as the Milk Brothers had been invited by the Manchuria Amusement Association for a tour through Chosen and Manchoukuo. The principal itinerary includes Dairen, Mukden, Hsinking, Harbin, Seishin, Kanko, Jinsen, Genzan, Keijo and Fusan, where they are now playing one after another. Their Tokyo return is expected in the latter part of December.

Twelve dances, mostly of the classical Kabuki dances, will make up the fifth program of the Gasenkai dance school headed by Sudahachi Hanayagi, which will be given at the Gunjin Kaikan, Kudan, at 3 p.m. tomorrow. The features include "Fujimusume" (Daughter of Wisteria), and "Genroku Hanami Odori" (Cherry-Viewing Dances in the Genroku Era).

COLLEGE FOOTBALL FEATURES 3 GAMES

St. Paul's Faces Meiji 2 p.m. Saturday, Waseda-Keio Fracas Sunday 2:15 p.m.

Week-end Games

Meiji vs St. Paul's, Saturday 2 p.m.
Hosei vs Nichidai, Sunday 12:45 p.m.
Waseda vs Keio, Sunday 2:15 p.m.

Three league games of the Kanto Inter-collegiate Football League will be played this week-end at the Korakuen stadium, Saturday. The championship bound Meiji eleven will tangle at 2 p.m. with hapless St. Paul's team. On Sunday the classic Waseda versus Keio battle will feature a twin-bill which has Nichidai facing Hosei from 12:45 p.m.

Meiji, the only undefeated eleven of the league should breathe through the St. Paul's gridster's who have yet to chalk up a victory. Crammed with talent, the Meiji team has left string of victories which makes them one of the finest elevens in Nippon's gridiron history. Undefeated, untied and unscored on, the Surugadai club has swept through, Keio, Waseda, Hosei and Nichidai in a whirlwind fashion.

Meiji's backfield is certain to have Fukunaga at quarterback, Wada and Kawashima at the halfs and Obana, the jolting line-smasher at fullback. The line measures up to the backfield standard. Oda and Kunimoto are as fine a pair of ends as one could wish to see. The group of tackles and guards, Ikeda, Takimoto, Koga and Nikaido are phenomenally strong. And Terada, year in and year out for the last several seasons has been everything a pivot man should be.

Thus the Meiji team will line-up against St. Paul's which have romped through all opposition. While the game promises to be a route, it will be worth the admission to see in action this great eleven from Surugadai.

The Waseda—Keio fracas on Sunday has all the earmarks of a battle royal. Past records do not mess a thing when teams of Waseda and Keio clash. This fall especially both elevens were shamefully treated by the Meiji eleven and are out to redeem themselves ready to shoot the works.

Keio, the defending champion has been hot and cold this season. In their early games they displayed some of the flash and power which took them to the top of the league last year. However against Meiji, they were decidedly out-maneuvered and out-fought and continued in that state against Nichidai two weeks ago, resulting in a surprising Nichidai victory.

Waseda on the other hand, despite the 32 to 0 beating at the hands of Meiji, has a strong attacking team that will roll. Their forward line is the heaviest of the teams and they have backs that have picked up plenty of yardage all season.

Nakamura, the left-half distinguished himself against Meiji. His pitching was a constant threat and he showed that he can pack the mail. At fullback is Yasuda, whose line-plunging has meant first downs when downs were needed most. Yasuda also handles the kicking and passing chores. The signal calling job is handled by Fujii while Fujioka takes the blocking assignment.

The forward wall of Waseda has seen numerous men in the starting line-up, but Coach Fujioka will probably call on Fukushima and Umeda at the ends, Tabata and Kageyama tackles, Noro and Kaji, guards and Kagami center.

Keio has a steady line, with only one newcomer from last year's forwards. Tanaka, the tall pass-catching wingmen is slated to start at right end. The rest of the line will be the workers of old with Tanifuchi and Tsujita at the tackles, Teru Yoshida and Tsugami at the guards and Tets Yoshida at center. Tomita, a great ball hounder will complete the line at left end.

Captain Tazawa, at full, Keio's only triple-threat will be teamed with Miyoshi and Ibaragi at the halfs and Matsuo at quarterback. Other backs who should see action for Keio are Miyakoshi, Nakano and Ohseco halfs, Okada quarter and Tokunaga full.

The Hosei versus Nichidai clash should turn out to be an interesting game. Both teams are fresh from victories, Hosei taking St. Paul's into camp last Sunday while Nichidai is flushed with a brilliant win over Keio.

Religious Services in Theaters

The local Roman Catholic Church of the Holy Rosary for a while provided the only religious services, but now the Rev. E. M. Barr, of the Presbyterian Church at St. John's, 80 miles from here, comes over to conduct Protestant services in the theater on Sundays.

A dozen softball teams, including one from the Marines, provide much of the sport. Horseshoe pitching and golf driving practice are other diversions.

St. John's is the favorite place of recreation, but the first 50 miles are over dusty dirt roads of very poor quality. In this 50 miles there are only two small hamlets, and indeed the nearest tailor to the base is 80 miles away. For all that, the men find the pay good. One male typist, earning $35 a week, learned to run a bulldozer and jumped to $78.10 a week.

Rubber Saving Plan

United Press

ROME, November 6.—The Tevere, commenting on the rubber scarcity, today advocated that a ban be placed on the number of bicycles circulating in Italian city streets. It said that in Germany bicycles may be only ridden by those who live a distance of more than two kilometers from their venue of work.

Nicki Wan Retains Orient Heavy Title

...Beating Old-Timer Logan in 10 Rounds

United Press

MANILA, November 8.—Youth was served in the early hours of this morning at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum when young, hard-hitting Nicki Wan, Russian-Chinese scrapper from Shanghai, retained the Oriental heavyweight championship by gaining a decision over Luis Logan, veteran Spanish slugger, in 10 rounds.

Wan, weighing 178 pounds, badly battered the game old Spaniard, who tipped the scales at 171, in the last three rounds of a fight that was earlier booed for lack of action.

Logan, former Oriental champion, emerged from one of his periodic retirements to get a crack at the title, but his age proved too much of a handicap.

Two judges gave Wan the decision, while the third held the bout a draw. The United Press sports scribe at the ringside gave Wan seven out of the ten rounds, with Logan taking the other three.

Five thousand spectators watched the bout which was the feature clash in a special card held for the British War Relief.

The bout started slowly, with Wan showing caution and holding off Logan for the first five rounds. When the veteran Spaniard began showing signs of fatigue, Wan sprinted and became the aggressor, especially in the final three rounds when he rocked Logan with hard lefts and rights.

Logan attempted to use his famous left, but couldn't connect as Wan kept out of range. The lanky Spaniard weakened considerably in the latter five rounds and a most folded up when Wan started to bore in, punishing him heavily at close quarters.

In the first two rounds, Logan was the aggressor and pressed his foe, attempting to corner him and connect with his deadly left. Wan showed shifty footwork and cleverly blocked Logan's left, tying up the Spaniard on many occasions.

The fans booed the slowness and clinching in the first three rounds, after which the fighters showed slight improvement. They increased the pace and staged a number of slugging frays.

Wan soon gained full confidence and started to come in strongly, whipping neat jabs to the lanky Spaniard's body to slow him up.

Logan kept fighting gamely until the final bell and remained on his feet, but he was in a bad way toward the end of the fight, taking some terrible blows to the midriff and face, which was bruised.

FIVE EVENTS FIXED AT Y.C.A.C. GROUNDS

Club's Untied and Unbeaten Rugby Team Will Meet Koekai Fifteen

Rugby, soccer, hockey, basketball and tennis matches are included in this weekend's sports activities at the Yokohama Country and Athletic Club.

The Y.C. and A.C.'s unbeaten and untied rugby team will participate in the first item of the heavy program, being scheduled to play its sixth game of the season at 3 p.m. Saturday against the Koekai fifteen.

Two soccer matches will be played on Sunday morning by the club's first and second elevens, both of which have yet to be beaten or tied this fall. The seconds are to meet the Kongo Club at 10 a.m. and the firsts will take the field at 11:15 a.m. against a collegiate side. The latter tilt should produce the best association football of the season at the club grounds.

Sunday Busy Day

The Y.C. and A.C.'s lady athletes will have a busy Sunday afternoon with two basketball games and hockey on their schedule. The second quintette is to play the St. Maur's School basketeers at 3:20 p.m., while the firsts will oppose the Motomachi Girls Higher School squad an hour later. All lady members interested in playing basketball this season are being asked to turn out for the first game.

The girls will also take the club field at 1:30 p.m. Sunday for hockey. They will either hold a practice or take part in a mixed game.

The Y.C. and A.C.'s first hockey team is booked to meet outside opposition at 2:30 p.m. Sunday. This match will be the first fixture this season which is not an intra-club game.

With the second round matches of the club's autumn tennis tournament scheduled to be completed this weekend, many of the competitors in the various events will be busy on the courts both Saturday and Sunday.

Members are being asked to note that the Club Activities card which they received a few days ago gives the program for November and not October, as stated on the card. The numerical dates are given correctly, the only change necessary being the substitution of November where October is printed.

Badminton on Monday

Badminton players are being reminded that the club auditorium is reserved for them on Monday and Thursday evenings, and on those Wednesday evenings on which no other club activity is scheduled. Table tennis players have these premises on Friday evenings, and the basketball players, both men and ladies, use it for their practices on Tuesday evenings. All members interested in these sports are being invited to participate.

IRISH BEAT MIDDIES; HARVARD WINS, 20-6

Navy Loses 20 to 13—Cadets Humiliated 20 to 6—Panthers Trample Rams

United Press

NEW YORK, November 8.—America's mighty service elevens went down in a blaze of glory today under the hammering cleats of Notre Dame and Harvard, as the Irish and the Minnesota Gophers continued their twin drives for the mythical national championship by maintaining unblemished their undefeated records.

Stung by the 0 to 0 tie with Army last week, the Notre Dame Ramblers smashed down a great Navy bid for supremacy and took the Middies into camp by a 20 to 13 decision. Harvard, fresh from its victory two weeks ago over the Navy, battered down Army's highly touted eleven, 20 to 6 in one of the major upsets of the day.

Minnesota, with the Big Nine title safety in its grasp, waltzed out of the conference over the week-end and trimmed their traditional rivals, the Nebraska Cornhuskers, 9 to 0.

Low Pittsburgh, however, staged a great comeback after failing to win a major game this year and scored a stunning upset 13 to 0 victory over the Fordham Rams.

Stanford Takes USC

On the Pacific Coast, Stanford virtually annexed the title by defeating the University of Southern California, 13 to 0 as the Washington Huskies smashed the California Gold Bears, 13 to 6.

The Ohio State Buckeyes sent glimmering Wisconsin's hopes of annexing or taking a part share in the Big Nine title by taking a 46 to 34 decision in a wide-open, roaring game marked more by brilliant offense than defense. In the other Big Nine game, Northwestern took a 20 to 11 decision from Indiana.

In the southwest, undefeated Texas saw its record marred when Baylor—defeated in its last three starts—held the Longhorns to a 7 to 7 tie in the major game of that sector.

Jamming the stadium at Baltimore to capacity, 67,000 wild-eyed fans saw Notre Dame take their thrilling 20 to 13 win from the Middies. Both teams opened slowly and neither were able to penetrate the other's 35-yard line in the first quarter.

In the second, Dippy Evans, Irish back, intercepted Busik's long pass and raced 40 yards to the Navy's 40-yard stripe before he was hauled down. Angelo Bertelli, Notre Dame grid artist, then uncorked his right arm and hurled the ball to Evans who took it on the two-yard line just as he was hit. Evans took the ball over for the touchdown on the next play.

Navy, however, uncorked tremendous power and marched 54 yards in straight plays for a score and by converting the point-after-touchdown sent the game into a 7-all tie.

Score on 7 Plays

Undeterred by this, the Irish carried the kick-off to a touchdown in seven plays that caught Navy completely off balance. The Irish poured around end and off tackle, and then highlighted the drive with three straight successful passes by Bertelli. Notre Dame failed to convert and the score stood 13 to 7.

Bertelli was again pouring the ball into open hands of waiting Irish receivers in the third quarter when "Butch" Cameron galloped in from the side, intercepted one of Bertelli's heaves on the dead run and raced 33 yards to score standing up. Not a Notre Dame hand touched the fleet Navy back. Navy also failed to convert, and the score was tied at 13-13.

In the fourth quarter, the Irish Marched 50 yards to score in five plays and went ahead, 20 to 13, as Navy seemingly was demoralized momentarily. Bob Clark, Navy back, however injected new life into the Middie outfit and spearheaded a 61-yard drive to the Irish three-yard stripe. Clark tried to pass on fourth down, with the ball still three yards to go, but the Irish intercepted the pass and took it up field. Notre Dame then proceeded to stall the last few seconds of the game to take the win.

Army Drops First Game

Taking advantage of the crisp, sunny day at Cambridge, 53,000 fans watched Army lose its first game of the year when Harvard inflicted a humiliating 20 to 6 defeat on the Cadets.

Army tallied first in the opening quarter when Leo Mazur, triple-threat Army back, threw a high floating pass 28 yards to Kellehel, climaxing a 62-yard drive straight down the field through Harvard's defenses. Kellehel took the ball in the end zone for the score.

Franky Lee, fleet Harvard back, teamed up with Don Forte, substitute Crimson end, in the second quarter to give Harvard its first score. With fourth down and goal to go, five yards distant, Lee took the ball and tossed the ball into the end zone. Caught in a welter of three Army defense backs, Forte leaped into the air and caught the ball. He managed to hold on as he went down in the pile of players, and Harvard tied the score at 6-all. The play climaxed a 72-yard march in which Harvard called on every trick play in the bag to outwit the Cadets.

Opening the third quarter, Lee took the kickoff on his own five-yard line and aided by beautiful interference, wove his way 66 yards to Army's 29-yard stripe. Hit hard from the side, Lee fumbled but a team-mate recovered and Harvard was in scoring position. Don McNicol, young Harvard star, virtually single-handed carried the ball across the final line in a series of slams through the line that wilted Army's defenders.

Harvard iced the game in the fourth quarter by intercepting an Army pass and then driving 34 yards in seven plays for the tally. The drive was aided by a clipping penalty inflicted on Army. Harvard converted both points-after-touchdown in the final two scores, to chalk up their most imposing win of the season.

Pitt Upsets Fordham 13-0

The Pittsburgh Panthers pulled themselves out of the season-long doldrums with a brilliant 13 to 0 win over the Fordham Rams at Pittsburgh. Twenty thousand fans braved the cold weather to watch what was considered the year's biggest upset.

Pittsburgh uncovered its old-time power in the very opening minutes and marched 70 yards in the first 12 minutes to score. The drive was featured by a 28-yard pass from Edgar Jones, Pittsburgh's crack half-back, to Bill Dufton, his running-mate. Saska, Pittsburgh's full-back, scored from the one-yard line.

The Rams never threatened in the opening period and the two team fought out the entire second quarter between their 30-yard lines with neither threatening to score. Pittsburgh was in danger momentarily in the third period when Fordham drove straight down field to the Panther's 13-yard stripe but Pittsburgh stiffened and held for downs.

In the fourth, Ed Jones raced in on a tangent to nab off a short pass from Steve Filipowicz, the Rams' crack passer, and then raced 30 yards for the second Pittsburgh score.

Fordham turned on the heat from there on, but was unable to uncork any real threat. The Ram passing game was not clicking, and Pittsburgh picked off the passes at opportune times. Fumbles at crucial times also nullified all of the Fordham threats.

DEFENSE OF BURMA PROGRESSING DAILY

British Send More Troops—Aliens Travel Restricted—Air Tactics Studied

Reuters

RANGOON, November 9.—While not spectacular, the progress made since 1939 in augmenting the defense of Burma has been steadily and carefully matched to the needs created by changing international conditions, writes a military correspondent.

Today, although more work remains to be done on many phases of defense preparations—particularly A.R.P. and other emergency training—Burma has a planned defense strength that was almost completely lacking in 1939. Each week sees that strength increasing.

Outbreak of the war found Burma, newly separated politically from India, a focal point of world attention because of the new operation of the unique Burma Road—Chungking's last artery for war supplies from Europe and America.

Burma, however, was then poorly equipped to take its place within the eastern triangle—Hongkong, Malaya, Burma—of the Empire's defense program. The Rangoon River could not house or repair big units of Britain's Fleet and had few harbor defense works; there was no defensive Air Force; no anti-aircraft units; little Army mechanization; and no real fortifications except certain frontier strong posts.

Military Forces Small

The total of available troops also was very small, with only one-third of them European, although considerable emergency strength was available in two excellent and unique Burma forces—the Military Police and the Burma Frontier Force. Both are notable for their progressive enlistment of men from the many warrior tribes inhabiting the frontier hills.

A sudden change in Burma's defense conditions was marked in April 1940 by the promotion to Lieutenant-General of the G.O.C. of the Army in Burma (Lieutenant-General D. K. McLeed). That move placed the Army on an equivalent basis with the Army in Malaya.

Also Britain, newly alert to Burmese defense needs and to the possibility of a direct attack on the Burma Road, sent more British and Indian troops to stiffen Burma's defenses, and strong posts with modern weapons were formed to command all dry weather routes crossing the 900-mile stretch of frontier with Indo-China and Thailand. Defenses also were created against attack from the air or from the sea.

At the same time restrictions were placed on the residence and travel of aliens in certain areas, more modern arms and the latest types of mechanized vehicles and equipment began under Burmese and European officials; an R.A.F. group arrived; and intensified recruiting opened for the Burma Rifles, for engineer units, for Air Auxiliary and Territorial forces, and for the first Burmese Naval Volunteer Reserve.

All have proved extremely popular with the people of Burma, who also have made cash gifts of more than £250,000 to the national war fund in addition to the donation of a Burmese "Peacock" squadron of the latest British fighter planes to the R.A.F.

Supporting the new defense program the Burmese Legislature carried a first war budget of Rs. 5.33 lakhs—big increase on the 1939 budget. At the same time work was begun in the big dockyards at Rangoon on construction of fast coast patrol launches, motor mine-sweepers, and anti-submarine launches.

Keels for other defense craft were also laid down for the Admiralty and for the Government of Ceylon, and an expansion of training of Burmese ratings was adopted to prepare crews for Burma's first navy now in patrol operation.

Other forms of local production, essential to the Empire war effort, also made big extensions; one of the most notable being the increase in petrol production from the country's oilfields.

New Air Routes Begun

New air services, vital as communication lines, and helping to speed up construction of a big chain of new defensive airdromes, also began to operate. And to the Rangoon-Kunming (China), K.L.M. and British Overseas Airways services was added a daily Chinese Government shuttle service between Lashio and Chungking. Other new services are planned, or ready to start, and augmenting of the local R.A.F. strength in fighter and bomber planes is being accompanied by the extension of more main and auxiliary airdromes throughout the length and breadth of the country.

Meanwhile, vital points have been given coast battery and anti-aircraft protection; anti-tank weapons are adding new defensive strength to all military forces; and mechanized vehicles of the latest type have modernized communication lines and methods, or exist as potential spearheads for defense or defensive attack.

All this access of strength has been achieved without interruption either to essential exports or production for the Empire's war effort, and without interruption to the great and increasing flow of arms, equipment, planes, and other war materials.

New Refining Process

Reuters

NEW YORK, November 8.—The Atlantic Refining Company announced yesterday an inexpensive new process for using caustic soda and methanol for removing the obnoxious smell from petrol and stepping-up the octane rating. The method has been developed after a decade's experimentation, and removes virtually all sulphur, thus reducing the necessary amount of tetrathyl lead for the production of anti-knock fuel.

U-Boat Given Send-Off

Amid the stirring notes of a march rendered by a military band and the rousing cheers of well-wishers, a German undersea craft prepares to glide out into the enemy-infested waters on its mission of destruction to enemy shipping.

BRITAIN'S APPEAL ON TAXES DENIED

Connecticut Attorney General Says Alien-Owned War Plants Are Not Exempt

Shades of the Stamp Act and the Boston Tea Party were revised in New England recently, in somewhat reverse fashion, when Connecticut's State Attorney General Francis A. Pallotti rejected a request of the British Government that $24,000,000 worth of British-financed war factories in Connecticut be declared exempt from taxation.

"In the absence of statutory provision or treaty," Mr. Pallotti informed State Tax Commissioner Charles J. McLaughlin, "no exemption exists for property owned by a foreign sovereign within the State."

The British property, if assessed, will produce an annual revenue of about $500,000 in five cities—Hartford, Waterbury, New Haven, Bridgeport and Danbury, the New York Herald Tribune reports.

The Attorney General took issue with an opinion on the case expressed recently by Secretary of State Cordell Hull in a letter to Governor Robert A. Hurley.

"It would be unfortunate, Mr. Hull wrote, "if the authorities of Connecticut should undertake to enforce payment of taxes in question by interference with the property of a foreign sovereign. . . . A government is not subject to suit in the courts of another country without its consent and its property is not subject to seizure or attachment through judicial proceedings."

Mr. Pallotti said he agreed that "all possible aid should be given to the British Government," and he also agreed with Mr. Hull's view that a foreign government is not subject to the jurisdiction of American courts. But, he continued, "unless there is express provision by treaty limiting the right of the State to the taxation of property belonging to a foreign State, it may be taxed."

Meanwhile, Judge Ernest A. Inglis, of Superior Court, brought to an end the longest civil trial in the history of Connecticut when he handed down a decision ruling that the Most Rev. Maurice F. McAuliffe, Roman Catholic Bishop of Hartford, controls the property of the St. John's Greek Catholic Church in Bridgeport, Connecticut. The trial lasted eleven weeks.

The church is the cathedral church of the Right Rev. Orestes Chornock, Bishop of the Carpatho-Russian Greek Catholic Church in the United States. Bishop Chornock was excommunicated by Pope Pius XI in 1936 after he led a schism of Greek Catholic priests in the United States who refused to accept a bishop appointed by the Pope and attempted to break the communion of the Greek Catholic Church with Rome.

The dispute began in 1932 on the question of married clergy. Bishop Basil Takach, whom the Pope had appointed as head of the Greek rite church in the United States, refused to ordain married priests. Bishop Chornock was married at the time and living with his wife at St. John's Rectory. His wife died soon after his excommunication.

Bishop Chornock refused to surrender the St. John's Church property to another priest named by Bishop Takach and the legal battle followed. Judge Inglis's decision represents a victory for the Vatican, for he not only ruled that the church is the property of Bishop McAuliffe, but ordered Bishop Chornock to surrender the church to Bishop Takach's appointee.

Former Governor Raymond E. Baldwin, counsel for Bishop Chornock, announced that he would appeal to the State Supreme Court.

Better Light Sought So Senators Can See If Wives Are Present

WASHINGTON.—After hearing an appeal for better lighting so that members might more readily determine when their wives were in the galleries, the Senate speedily approved recently an investigation of possible improvements in the chamber. "Sometimes," complained Senator Andrews (Democrat of Florida), sponsor of the inquiry, "it is hard to determine whether your wife is sitting in the gallery or not, because you can't see." Besides a new lighting system, Andrews said, the investigation would be directed toward a permanent roof to do away with the present temporary steel braces, the possible installation of a sound system for better acoustics, and redecoration.

U.S. AUTO INDUSTRY WARNED ON PRICES

Government May Fix Ceilings in All Categories, O.P.A. Official States

Cyrus McCormick, chief of the Automobile and Truck Price Section of the United States Office of Price Administration, warned the automobile industry that the Government is prepared to step in and establish price ceilings covering both the wholesale and retail price of new cars, trade-in allowances on used cars, prices at which dealers sell used cars and even the price of repair parts. He added that if the industry acts "wise" there will be no need for such price regulation, according to a Baltimore, September 10, report to the New York Herald Tribune.

In an address before the Automobile Trade Association of Maryland Mr. McCormick said the public must be protected against profiteering by automobile companies. If an automobile company seeks to make an "unwarranted profit at the expense of the emergency created by defense," he said, O.P.A. is ready to take immediate steps. However, he continued, if companies continue to conduct their business in a normal way, O.P.A. can "let it tend to its own price business."

Mr. McCormick said that it was not the purpose of O. P. A. to interfere with business for the sake of interference. "Where price ceilings have already been set, the purpose has been to head off a definite inflationary trend . . .

"But I want to give you fair warning that, if the necessity arises, this office will be prepared and will take the same sort of action for your industry that it has taken for every other industry where inflationary tendencies develop. Please note that I say 'if the necessity arises.' This means that we will be prepared to establish price ceilings covering both the wholesale price and the retail price of new cars, trade-in allowances on used cars, prices at which dealers sell used cars, and the price of repair parts. This we must do in the protection of the public interest if your industry develops inflationary tendencies.

"I assume that it is your hope, and I know that it is our hope, that, through cooperation, the confusion of any such effort may be avoided. If I know anything about the automobile industry, the industry will be willing to cooperate. I have talked at length with Leon Henderson, and I know that on his part he, too, is willing to cooperate. As a matter of fact, he has instructed me to go out of my way to lay a friendly basis for mutual cooperation."

The World Apart

all the bountiful gifts of nature. It is the wonderful powers with which the Creator has endowed nature, that bring forth year after year, season after season, just what God's most wonderful creature, man, needs to pass the days allotted to him here below. That is the A.B.C. of all national belief in God; rational, that is, based on reason.

But if the A.B.C. needs no further insistence, it is not so with the D.E.F down to Z. And somewhere in that line stands also the word Thankfulness.

With all this plenty around us, don't let us forget to look up with heartfelt thanks to the "Giver of all good things," and to give credit to his infinite Wisdom and almighty Power that can and does—"command that these stones, this earth, this dust, be made into bread." And let us trust with renewed assurance in the loving Providence of our Father in heaven, and take afresh for our guiding light those matchless words of the Sermon on the Mount, with which I would conclude these musings on "The World Apart." They are:

"Behold the birds of the air for they neither sow, nor do they reap nor gather into barns and your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are you not of much more value than they?....And for raiment why are you solicitous? Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow: they labor not, neither do they spin. But I say to you that not even Solomon in all his glory was arrayed as one of these. And if the grass of the field, which is today and tomorrow is cast into the oven, God doth so clothe, how much more you, o ye of little faith? Be not solicitous therefore, saying, What shall we eat: or, What shall we drink: or, Wherewith shall we be clothed? For after all these things do the heathens seek. For your Father knoweth that you have need of all these things. Seek ye therefore first the kingdom of God and his justice: and all these things shall be added unto you." (Mt. 6, 25—33)

GREAT MEIJI ELEVEN ANNEXES GRID TITLE

Crushes St. Paul's 38-6, but Unscored Record Marred—Wada, Yamahira, Obana Shine

The Meiji University eleven annexed the Kanto Intercollegiate Football League title by defeating St. Paul's, 38 to 6 Saturday afternoon at the Korakuen stadium. The great club from Surugadai brought their drive to a close for the League championship with a record of five straight victories.

Lowly St. Paul's however, sent glimmering Meiji's hopes of maintaining unblemished an unscored upon record, by converting a blocked kick for a touchdown and six points in the fading minutes of the game.

Meiji finished their season in a blaze of glory mostly through the brilliant play of Ryutaro Wada, the fleet halfback who scored three touchdowns with dazzling runs of 33, 35 and 48 yards besides pitching a 47 yard touchdownpass to Yamahira.

Obana and Wakatake accounted for the other Meiji touchdowns, while Terada and Obana made good on the conversions.

With the score 32 to 0 and less than three minutes left in the game, Meiji was forced to kick out from their own 7-yard line. Yamahira's kick was blocked and the ball slid into the end zone where Terai, Rikkyo fullback fell on the pigskin for Rikkyo's lone score.

St. Paul's received the opening kick-off and immediately marched straight upfield to two first downs. However, a fourth down plunge failed to carry the necessary distance and Meiji had the ball on their 26.

Getting nowhere Meiji kicked out and St. Paul's after ringing up another first down booted out to their own 46.

From there Meiji pieced together a sustained drive with Obana slicing off his own left guard on a delayed buck for Meiji's first touchdown from the 3-yard line. Obana's place kick was wide.

In the second period, Meiji worked the ball down to St. Paul's 4 but lost the ball on downs. St. Paul's kicked out to own 35 and from there Meiji had another touchdown in two plays.

After a shot off-tackle picked up two yards, Wada started off his right, cut back beautifully over his guard and out-raced the pack to score unmolested. The place-kick was low and had a 12 to 0 margin.

Yamahira Scores on Pass

At the start of the second half, Meiji poured around the end and through center for 30 yards but St. Paul's fighting stubbornly refused to melt to this "team of the year." Then Wada uncorked his right arm and hurled the ball to halfback Yamashira who took the ball on the 21-yard line and continued his way to pay-dirt. The play was good for 47 yards.

St. Paul's however, undeterred kept plugging away with Terai and Captain Ando picking up yards steadily with off-tackle smashes. Just as they began to roll, Meiji stiffened and forced Terai to punt.

At this point, Wada again got down to serious work. From St. Paul's 35, Wada pranced around his own right end and eluded a couple of would be tacklers to score standing up. This time Yamahira made good on the extra-point place kick and Meiji lead, 25-0.

As a parting gesture, Wada midway in the final quarter took the ball from midfield and kept right on downfield aided by splendid blocking to race to his third touchdown and Meiji's fifth touchdown. Terada, versatile center put his educated right foot to work to make good the drop-kick giving Meiji 32 points.

From here on St. Paul's roared ahead for their longest sustained drive, reaching Meiji's 25-yard line. Terai and Ando featured the drive with their bruising plunges. A talking penalty here placed the ball on Meiji's 10 and St. Paul's was within scoring distance.

However two shots at the line and a wide sweep around end picked up a scant six yards. Then two plays later followed Meiji's unfortunate attempt at kicking the ball out which was blocked for St. Paul's lone score.

With a minute left Meiji drove right down the field following the kick-off culminated by a Shimogaki to Wakatake touchdown pass from St. Paul's 10 yard line.

The line-up:

BUDAPEST, November 10.—Terms of office of 17 Jewish municipal councilors which expire on January 1, 1942, will not be extended, according to a decree signed by the Hungarian Minister of the Interior this morning. This decree further provided that new elections for the municipal council will not take place at the present time. Owing to the existing circumstances, the terms of office of the remaining 154 councilors will be prolonged.

Bomber Lands in Sweden

STOCKHOLM, November 10.—The British bomber which made a forced landing in the southern Swedish province of Schoneri on Saturday was a four-motored Handley-Page-Halifax craft. This bomber was forced to land owing to the damage it sustained from German anti-aircraft shells. The crew of this plane did not include a single Englishman.

Sea Monster

A "super-dreadnought" octopus, 12 feet long tipping the scales at 208 pounds, was washed ashore dead at Itoigawa, Niigata Prefecture, facing the Japan Sea, early Friday morning. Fishermen who discovered the monster say it is the largest of the kind that has ever been found in this country. They lugged it to the fish market.

People at Itoigawa are fussy over this huge eight-armed cephalopod that it is supposed to have sought its "eternal resting place" on the Japanese side of the sea coasts escaping the dangerous Japan Sea beset with floating mines.

TRADITIONAL FOES MEET IN FOOTBALL

Waseda-Keio Fracas Billed 2:30 p.m. Today at Korakuen— Hosei-Nichidai in Opener

The hottest gridiron rivalry of the Kanto Collegiate Football League will take place today with the clash of the elevens from Waseda and Keio at Korakuen stadium. The second game of a twin-bill, this game is slated to get under way at 2:30 p.m.

In the first game, Hosei and Nichidai will meet with the kick-off scheduled for 12:30 p.m. This little "big game" should also be an interesting fracas, with Hosei out to avenge last year's set-back by Coach Kasahara's gridiron stalwarts.

The Waseda-Keio tilt should be a thriller. Although both elevens were smashed into defeat by the championship Meiji eleven, they nevertheless are top-notch teams and their rivalry is legendary.

Last fall, Keio defeated Waseda 13 to 7 in clinching the title and are given a good chance to repeat the win over Waseda. Waseda on the other hand have come up with several new men who have made them a powerful offensive eleven. The consensus is that the game is a natural with both teams given a fifty-fifty chance of coming out on the long end of the score.

The probable starting line-ups:

scientists stressing the value of psychological analysis to be applied in the field of religious phenomena, is inquiring the most pronounced phases and peculiarities of asceticsm in an excellent book. He makes a clear distinction between religious ethical and pathological form of the mortification of the body. While the method of ethical perfection was represented by Leo Tolstoy, religious asceticism consisting in the contradiction of natural desires was chiefly cultivated by the saints of the Middle Ages.

The stories and experiences of that pious man were, of course, at that time regarded only as evidence of distinguished fellowship with God. But the rational inquiry makes us ask how far we are dealing with neuropathic phenomena, for in the Christian Church were from the earliest age a leaning to excessive forms, but we must be convinced that in the Catholic Church common sense prevailed, and those who desired to follow the Encratite ideal, had to repair to the monastery. Reading this part of the diligently collected source material, we get aware of the intrinsical relationship between religion and morbidness.

Asceticism in its origin was usually not ascetic in a modern sense, i.e., not ethical, because some testimonies show that it was a mode of preparing oneself for the sacramental eating of a sacred animal. Indian and Buddhist conception, on the other side, is a more ethical and philosophical product mixed with an old idea widespread in Eastern countries. The reason for avoiding flesh diet can be explained to be the fear of absorbing the soul of the animal which resides in the blood. The Mohammedan prohibition must be pointed out by the belief that a soul or spirit of a demon would be in the wine which takes possession of a drunken man. Fasting, especially, is a recognized mode of evoking the spirit world, and rewarded saints by glimpses of the beatific vision.

The literature concerning asceticism has attained such proportions that any attempt at completeness seems to be entirely out of the question. Nevertheless, the author of the meritorious work gives the most important books, and among those are many which have a special interest for Buddhist readers. Being at the end, we must leave the essential unexplained. We have cast up the total, but one item concerning the phenomenon of asceticism is missing. Whence did it come, that inexplicable and strange singularity of the human nature?

TEN MILES OF TUNNELS BORED AT GIBRALTER

Underground City Has Electric And Wireless Equipment and Gun Emplacements

Reuters

GIBRALTAR, November 11.—Nearly 10 miles of new tunnels have been driven through the Rock at Gibraltar in 12 months. The underground city, electrically lit and soon to be equipped with electric heating and cooking from underground sub-stations, contains chambers larger than two tennis courts. Gun emplacements and search-lights capable of piercing smoke-screens are trained on positions below. Trucks and ambulances can drive right into the Rock. Operation rooms are ready for immediate use, and uninterruptable communication is assured by completely protected wireless aerials.

The tunneling was done by Royal Engineers and Canadians, most of whom were miners and quarrymen in peacetime. All hands assist to remove the excavated material. Three million cubic feet of rock have been removed and new tunnels are being added at the rate of half a mile per month.

China's Unification Lies In Issue With Japan

tors who came up to the capital from Shanghai, pledging his acceptance of their petition.

At the same time, he would not forget to strike a stagey gesture, by stroking his breast and urging the demonstrators to keep their duties as students and to leave handling of foreign affairs to him. On other occasions, he imprisoned Hu Han-min and detained General Li Tsi-chen, though he feigned ignorance of the fact. Besides he has at his beck and call the Chekiang financial clique and Blue Shirts Society, which represents a band of assassins. He has learned and practised all tricks and technique necessary for a warlord or overlord, as taught by Chinese history. If things were as in the past, he might be able to unify China.

China today, however, is not only a country of China, but a country of East Asia and also of the world. Chiang Kai-shek apparently has failed to size up the East Asiatic situation correctly, possibly because his favorite war story, San Kuo Chih, did not mention it. The result is the current deadlocked situation of China. For the present, he has given up his aspiration for the independence of China. He is ready to become the tool of Great Britain and the United States, entirely depending upon their aid. Inwardly, he may be prompted by the desire to realize his cherished ambition, by engineering Great Britain and the United States as well as by taking advantage of the Soviet Union. It may be well for him, however, to remember an old saying, "To go for wool and return shorn."

British Love of U.S. Centuries Old Myth

when beauty flees the land, affronted by the advances of Bullion Boundermess, posturing in spats and armed with dollars, the beauty-spot is all that remains.

"Perhaps it is because they dimly apprehend this fate for England, fearing that it may become the toy and the plaything of the vulgar rich from the United States—its culture lost, its beauty shattered, and its people parasites, that the English dislike America."....That's what the British really think of Americans. But now they are singing "God Bless America" and "Thank You, Mr. Roosevelt." Why? Because England loves America? Now, as in 1917, England needs American help—in men, money and materials. So the British gallantly swallow their dislike of Americans and sing "God Bless America." But, if by some miracle, the British emerge victorious with American aid....it will be Uncle Shylock and "those vulgar Americans" again instead of dear brothers and cousins across the sea.

Old War Tricks

Meantime the British are using a few of the old World War tricks again. They are borrowing billions from the United States and handing out a few small loans to its Allies to insure its loyalty to Britain....doing that with American money. When the time comes for repayment, the British will pull the old gag again: "Britain will demand from the Allied countries only so much as Britain is compelled to pay back to the United States."

So if America presses Britain for payment, London will turn the screws on Poland, Norway and the others, and say: "We hate to do this, but we have to because Uncle Shylock demands his pound of flesh." And, of course, there's nothing like making hay while the sun shines, so American charity in the shape of Lend-Lease materials obtained free of charge are being peddled in South America for hard cash.... American charity being used to cut the throat of American business in Latin America.

And yet, despite that record, Mr. Roosevelt urges the American people to make more sacrifices for the British Empire, and Lord Woolton, British Food Minister, unhesitatingly asks for more charity, demanding that Americans have creamless days so that the British can eat better food.

Y.C.A.C. COMES OUT EVEN ON 5 EVENTS

Soccer Players Show Best Results Over Weekend—Ladies Lose

Yokohama Country and Athletic Club teams broke even in their five games over the weekend, winning two and losing the same number, while the other, ended in a tie.

The soccer players fared best, the club seconds winning their game and the first obtaining a draw. The men's basketball team won a fast and well played game, but both the first and second ladies' quintettes lost to their opponents.

The rugby and hockey squads did not get into action over the weekend as their games were called off.

The first match was the soccer tilt Sunday morning between the club seconds and the Kongo Club. The Y.C. and A.C. eleven gained a 5 to 1 decision and thereby kept unsullied its record of having won every game it has played this fall.

Backs Play Well Again

The home team backs played their usual fine game, while the forwards showed to good advantage with the aid of Planas, the first stringer filling in so that the squad could make up a full side. With one of the Y.C. and A.C. players rendered hors-de-combat by halftime, the winners had only 10 men after the interval.

The game was fairly even in the initial stages, but the homesters gradually gained control. Beatty netted after 15 minutes to give the Y.C. and A.C. the lead and also obtained the second goal just before halftime by taking a fine center from Planas.

Planas made the next two points to boost the winners' total to four before the visitors could count with about 40 minutes of play left. Four minutes before the final whistle Planas sent across a pass in front of the goalmouth to Beatty, and the latter sent the ball into the cords from close quarters to complete the scoring.

Playing for the Y.C. and A.C. were E. Eymard, C. R. Fachtmann, M. V. Fachtmann, C. Heseltine, J. A. Dixon (captain), C. G. Stanbury, J. J. Planas, E. L. Gordes, Mola, G. E. Beatty and W. Salter.

Best Game of Season

In the finest exhibition of soccer seen at the Y.C. and A.C. this season the Y.C. and A.C. firsts and the H.Y.C. Club of Tokyo played to a three-all draw after the first contest was concluded.

Play was very even and the visitors, consisting of first class collegiate players, almost gained the decision in the final minutes.

The home team started off auspiciously, scoring twice before their opponents entered the scoring column. Makepeace drew first blood when he headed in a good pass from the wing. A couple of minutes later Wendbladh received the ball from the halfback line, swerved past the backs and netted from close in.

The visitors fought back hard and play swung to the other end of the field. Just before the intermission the visitors scored on a fine passing movement to reduce their deficit to one.

Five minutes after play was resumed the players from the capital equalized. A hard drive from the right inside forward hit one of the uprights. Harriss, the Y.C. and A.C. custodian, made a fine save on a rebound shot but the ball was driven home in the ensuing melee.

Fine Passing Gets Goal

The next goal, which regained the lead for the homesters, was one of the prettiest of the contest. Makepeace swung out toward the wing and on nearing the goal line sent across a fine pass which passed the posts. Blamey cut in from the other wing and transferred to Planas, who made no mistake with his drive.

The H.Y.C. squad knotted the count again four minutes later. The forwards broke away fast, passed the full backs with nice passing and the movement ended with the center finding the corner of the goal from 12 feet.

Vorobiov netted near the end but the effort was nullified with one of the forwards being offside. The visitors also counted soon after but this also did not count due to the same infraction of the rules.

Both squads displayed excellent football and were given a great hand by the spectators. All the players performed well.

The Y.C. and A.C. line-up consisted of F. R. Harriss, L. A. M. Frank, H. Fernandes, B. de Miranda, H. Schoene (captain), M. L. Russell, D. Vorobiov, G. W. Makepeace, J. J. Planas, U. Wendbladh and W. H. Blamey.

Captain A. G. Stevens put in a hard morning's work, refereeing both soccer contests.

Three Basketball Games

All three basketball games were played on the Y.C. and A.C. court Sunday afternoon.

First to take the hardwood were the club ladies second team which had to bow to the St. Maur's School five, 10 to 6

The students gained an early 6 to 0 lead due to two baskets by Alice Sikos and one by Toma Vervodin, but three successive shots by Gemma Andreis found the mark before the interval to deadlock the count.

In the second half the school girls gained four more points while blanking their opponents. Toma Vervodin and Lily Onoe both found the hoop for two points apiece.

Playing for the Y.C. and A.C. were Gemma Andries, Gertrude Satchell, Rune Hardvendel, Juliette Darbier and Shirley Bell. The opposition consisted of Lena Vlasova, Lily Onoe, Alice Sikos, Tamara Vervodin and Toma Vervodin.

The club's first quintette dropped a 35 to 12 decision to the fast Shirakiku five in the next casaba contest.

The visitors, comprised of graduates of Yokohama middle schools with a wealth of experience, gave a fine display, especially in the first half.

The homesters also played well and held their opponents to a 10 to 6 score at the interval. After the intermission the Y.C. and A.C. squad more than held their own with the visitors, outscoring them, 6 to 5.

The Y.C. and A.C. players, their positions and individual scores follow:

Vera Albeck, lf., 2; Maria Prohaska, lf.; Helen Lord, c., 4; Teresita Planas, rf., 6, and Mary Stevens, rg.

Y.C. and A.C. Five Wins

The men's game between the Y.C. and A.C. squad and the Honmoku Middle School, won by the former, 56 to 39, was the nightcap of the basketball tripleheader.

The contest was hard fought with both sides uncorking spurts which resulted in the lead changing hands several times before the winners began to dominate the play midway through the second half.

The students took the lead at first but had to give it up to their opponents midway through the initial stanza. However, they regained it to be out in front by 25 to 22 at the intermission.

Two baskets soon after the resumption put the clubbers ahead again, but only momentarily for the students sank a basket almost immediately after to step out in front for the third time.

At this point the Y.C. and A. C. squad staged a sustained rally which gained them 14 points to one for the opposition, making the score 40 to 28. From then on their comfortable lead was never threatened.

The winners' attack functioned extremely well in the second half, short and fast passes working the ball close to the opposition's basket. The students showed up well in the first stanza, but could not match the play of the home squad after the interval.

The Y.C. and A.C. players, their positions and individual totals follow:

J. Boixo, lf., 8; E. Eymard, rf., 14; M. V. Fachtmann, c., 18; F. R. Harriss lg., 6; G. R. Fachtmann, rg.; J. J. Planas, lf., 10, and D. Vorobiov, rg.

Refereeing the games was Mr. Hirota, while the scoring was done by Miss M. Prohaska and E. L. Gordes.

Skier Given Iron Cross

SANKT-ANTON, November 7.—Josef Jannewein, world ski champion, who is now serving in the German Air Force and has been on the western front for some time as a pursuit pilot, has just scored his first air victories. In recognition of his courageous efforts he has been decorated with the Iron Cross, 1st Class.

Gunman Runs Amok in London Streets, Kills Two, Wounds Several Passers-By

United Press

LONDON, November 12.—The second victim of a gunman who ran amok here yesterday morning died as police questioned a suspect in Chiswick station preparatory to preferring charges relative to a five-hour reign of terror in West London.

Mrs. Edith Amelia Barringer, 57, a Bruton housewife, died from bullet wounds incurred when an unidentified gunman ran amok, killed a lawyer outright and wounded five other women. Two other men also were reported wounded.

The gunman fired indiscriminately into crowds with a tommy-gun and shotgun as he drove along London streets in a black sedan.

A police car finally rammed a private car answering the description of the murder car and arrested the driver. The arrest was made at Watford bypass.

(Crimes involving firearms are extremely rare and unusual in London where it is almost unheard of for a criminal to carry a gun because of severe penalties involved.)

Police engaged in London's biggest manhunt of the war for a middle-aged, brownhaired man who, terrorized shoppers, apparently picking his victims indiscriminately from crowds.

Less is Ernest Lufttwad, 23, a lawyer, was killed in Chiswick shortly after 9 a.m. when he was shot at pointblank range as he was buying an Armistice Day poppy. A few minutes earlier a woman was shot twice in the arm as she was walking past an automobile parked on Chiswick street.

The car speeded off. A truckdriver attempted to follow but lost the faster vehicle. Then London's manhunt was on.

A.R.P. Ambulances rushed aid to injured persons as reports poured in that six other persons were shot in West London.

Stanley Randall of Hadley Gardens found one man who dragged himself into his back garden after being shot.

Mrs. Violet Pinder, 21, was taken to a hospital with leg wounds while a few blocks away Mrs. Emily Crisp, another housewife, also was wounded and pushed to a hospital.

A staff member of the Brentford public library said that a woman and a man were shot while walking along Duke Avenue.

"The driver of the car slowed down as he approached the woman and fired and hit her," said the librarian. "The car then speeded up. A bit further along the road a little man was coming in the opposite direction. Again the car slowed down and the little man was shot, then the car fled down the road."

'UNKNOWN SOLDIER' SELECTION IS TOLD

Immortal Symbol of French Watchfulness Chosen November 9, 1920

Transocean

VICHY, November 11.—How France selected the body of that "unknown soldier," who is now lying in the Pantheon in Paris next to Napoleon's grave, was described yesterday by the La Croix.

Shortly before November 9, 1920, Minister of Pensions Maginot asked the military commanders of the nine military regions comprising the former battlefields to dig out one soldier each, who could still be recognized as a French soldier but whose name could not be identified.

In this manner, the corpses of nine men who had fallen were taken on November 8 of that year to Verdun where they lay in state in a church the following day.

In the presence of war widows and the children of men who had fallen and of men who had been seriously wounded at the front, Minister Maginot went up to a badly wounded young French soldier, presented him with a bouquet of flowers and said:

"My soldier, I present you with a bouquet of flowers, which were picked from graves on the battlefield of Verdun where so many unknown soldiers are lying. I ask you to place these flowers on one of the coffins standing here. That will then be the coffin which the entire French people will accompany today to the Pantheon.

"This is the greatest honor which France could ever have bestowed on one of her sons. This unknown soldier will be the immortal symbol of French watchfulness. He died for right, liberty and the motherland."

EDUCATION REFORMS ARE MADE BY VICHY

Abolition of Free High School For French Boys and Girls Is Announced

The abolition of free high school education for French boys and girls, as instituted by the Third Republic, is one of the outstanding features of the far-reaching educational changes effected by a series of 30 decrees now being published by Le Journal Officiel, says a Vichy, September 3 dispatch to the New York Herald Tribune, which continues:

Jerome Carcopino, Secretary of State for Education, denouncing what he called "this disastrous myth of the demagogic legislators," declared in a broadcast defending his reforms that state scholarships for secondary schools would be increased to compensate for a measure that would otherwise close entirely the doors of the French lycee to the children of the poor. He defended his abolition of free high schools on the ground that the children of the poor made the classes unduly large and enabled the well-to-do, who could afford to pay, to get a secondary school training for their youngsters at the expense of the State.

Other features of the Vichy Government's overhauling of the national educational system are:

1. A leading place is to be given to the teaching of the classics and the humanities—the teaching of Latin and Greek.

2. Over-emphasis on mental training, cramming and overloading of the curricula are to be done away with, and more attention is to be paid to physical education.

3. In secondary schools girls are to get a different education than that of the boys, with special attention to music and housekeeping.

Borotra Behind Reform

The reform that will introduce more physical training is largely the work of Jean Borotra, former tennis star, who is now National Commissioner for Sports. For many years criticism has been widespread that French schools crammed the minds of their students with too many facts and left them pale and emaciated.

Now the "intellectual disciplines," as the French call book learning, are to be confined to morning sessions and the afternoons are to be left free for various other activities—five hours for sports a week for boys, four hours for girls and a day of manual training for both.

The classics are to come back into their own again and sciences are to be relegated to a minor position. Henceforth the name "lycee" (the French equivalent of the American high school) is to be reserved exclusively for schools giving a classical education in which six years of Latin will be compulsory and four years of Greek optional.

Modern Language Obligatory

Secondary schools giving scientific, technical or agricultural training are to be called colleges.

At least one modern language—either English or German is to be obligatory in all French secondary schools.

History teaching is to be revised, especially instruction in medieval history, which teachers under the Republic are acused of having "distorted." The Royalist complaint that too often French schoolboys got the impression in the state schools that the history of France began in 1789 will receive attention. Presumably in the new order of things more attention will be paid to St. Louis and less to Danton.

LISBON, November 6.—The serious decline in the export trade of Portugal became evident today with the publication of the statistics for the sale abroad of port wine.

In September, 1941, only 342,204 liters of port wine, one of the staple exports of the country, were sent abroad as compared with 1,634 836 liters during the corresponding month of last year and 5,760,440 liters during September, 1939.

This sharp decline in Portuguese wine exports was said to be mainly owing to the lack of foreign exchange and of British tonnage.

SWISS INCREASING FARMING PRODUCTS

Decree Obliges Every One to Contribute by Cultivating Piece of Ground

Transocean

BERLIN, November 10.—The process of revitalizing European farming has now also spread to Switzerland, according to a decree issued by the Economic Department of the Swiss Government during last week.

Already last year the cultivated area in Switzerland had been increased from 462,000 to 637,000 acres. The new decree now issued compels every Swiss to contribute to the nation's food supply. Every one in Switzerland must cultivate a certain piece of ground.

Of interest, too, was the announcement made in Norway that the country would well-nigh double its fodder cellulose production this winter. In the current economic year 180,000 tons of cellulose fodder mixed with 20,000 tons of herring meat will be used for fodder purposes.

Last week the Turkish Ministry of Commerce established the Central Food Board.

So far as European fuel supplies are concerned it was of interest to note last week that the French hard coal production, which had almost ceased in the summer of 1940, reached an annual production of 40,000,000 tons as compared with 47,000,000 tons before the war.

A French company for the production of peat was formed last week in order to improve the fuel situation.

Meanwhile 10,000,000 crowns were provided in Denmark for peat production in that country, while in Holland peat was won for the first time during last month.

The Italian Government provided a credit for examining coal fields in Albania.

During the week under report there were further signs of economic cooperation in Europe. From Vienna, German and Italian discussions were reported, from Paris there was news of negotiations of French and German gas industrialists and French and German insurance companies, while in Rome, German, French and Italian insurance companies met for a conference, which is to be continued in Munich.

The German-Turkish trade agreement has stimulated trade in Istanbul, according to reports received from the Turkish capital.

Rumanian—Turkish negotiations for a trade agreement have commenced, a German—Croat trade agreement was signed in Agram, the German Finnish trade agreement has been prolonged, a clearance agreement between Croatia and Finland concluded, and clearing traffic was organized between Croatia and Belgium.

Mexico Sees Progress In Domestic Program of the country which has been under way since 1910.

National and continental defense are of first concern to the Government. For the strengthening of defense two major programs were adopted. The first is a six-year plan for the increasing mechanization of the Army. The second is national military education to be started in 1942. The Army has been withdrawn from political activities and the Intelligence Service expanded.

Expansion of Navy

The Mexican Navy is also undergoing a reorganization and expansion for the protection of the two vast and strategic coastlines. The sum of 2,333,375 pesos has been spent on port improvements during the past nine months, three marine corps have been formed to guard naval bases and plans are under way for expanding the naval air force. The "urgent" formation of a merchant marine has been facilitated.

This comprehensive and detailed program which seeks to bring the political, economic and social factors of the Nation into productive balance led the President, in conclusion, to make a prophecy which has a great likelihood of coming true, say political observers here.

"There are signs in Mexico," said President Avila Camacho, "that the moment is near when we will witness how the human spirit resurges in its various manifestations. It is possible that our country, which anticipated with the 1910 Revolution certain reforms of a social and economic character that were later adopted by other nations, will again be found in the vanguard when the world begins to emerge from the darkness into which force and arbitrary acts have plunged it."

TURKEY GETS REICH GOODS

Machinery, Chemicals, Textiles Arriving Under New Trade Agreement

Transocean

ANKARA, November 6.—Large quantities of German goods, including machinery, chemicals, and textiles, will arrive in Turkey within the next few days, the Istanbul newspaper Cumhuriyet stated this morning.

These will be the first German shipments made on the basis of the new German-Turkish Trade Agreement.

Meanwhile, Turkish business circles have pointed out that the prices of these goods, despite the present high transportation costs, are much lower than the cost of similar goods imported from other countries, particularly from Great Britain and the United States.

CHOSEN ART EXHIBIT TO BE ON DISPLAY

Rare Art Objects Will Be Shown Five Days at Takashimaya Department Store

The old art objects being shown at the exhibition sponsored by the Chosen Industrial Art Association on the eighth floor of the Nihonbashi Takashimaya department store are not only of interest to art lovers but can be appreciated even by the laymen. The exhibition officially opens today and will continue through Sunday.

One room is set aside for objects of such value and rarity that they rank in the National Treasure class. Among these exhibits is an old copper kettle, battered and disfigured, which was excavated from an old temple in Chosen by the late Dr. T. Sekine, of the Imperial University. The kettle was in ancient times used for boiling. It is in two sections, the top part having large holes in the bottom and it was placed over the bottom section which was filled with boiling water. There seems to have been no way of keeping the water at the boiling point, however.

Old Sake Bottles

There are old sake bottles of unusual shapes and patterns, old metal mirrors, one of iron with bas-relief pattern in gold and silver. In this room there is the largest extant Chosen statue of Kannon Sama 1,300 years old dating back to the Sangoku period in Chosen history. The figure is sitting and the whole statue is two feet five inches in height. It is made of bronze and gold.

Among the rare objects are ladies' vanity boxes of porcelain. These are round in shape measuring in diameter from four to six inches and about three and a half inches deep. Inside the box is a small oil jug around which are several boxes all made of porcelain for ladies' various toilet articles. These are of curved shape so they fit inside the round outer box and also around the oil jar. These were used in Chosen some thousand and more years ago.

In the large or outer room of the exhibition there are old chests, porcelains, and various kinds of rare and interesting objects. One of the chests is a double Chosen box with a pattern of inlay tortoise shell and gold lacquer. It is not so old as many of the objects, though very beautiful, being only some 300 years old. Some of the chests of a thousand and more years of age have patterns of bright red. The pattern has been painted on the wood and then given a highly shiny surface by being polished with ground bones.

Porcelain God Shrine

There is a porcelain god shrine dating back to the Lakuro period, about 2,000 years ago, which is about one and a half feet high and four inches thick, with a sloping tiled roof. It is of putty color and green and was used as the household shrine.

One especially interesting article is a large roof tile mounted on a wooden base a small space in the center of which has been flattened for use as an ink stone.

The exhibition is directly under the supervision of Kisho Tiya, the Chosenese head of the Bunmei Shoten which is the headquarters of the Bunmei Industrial Art Association, and Kiyoshi Takeuchi, manager of the Bunmei Shoten. There are more than 3,000 articles on exhibit, some of which have been especially brought from Chosen for this exhibition. A large number of the objects are for sale but many are quite too rare and valuable.

NON-PARTY CABINET WANTED FOR CANADA

Senator Meighen Announces Acceptance of Leadership Of Conservative Party

Reuters

OTTAWA, November 13.—Senator Arthur Meighan, former Prime Minister, today announced his acceptance of the leadership of the conservative Party and immediately declared for "compulsory selective service over the whole field of war."

In a formal statement Senator Meighen declared himself in favor of the formation of non-party Government. He declared that the continuance of party control could not be justified if a ministry on a wider basis could be formed.

Senator Meighen said that the despotic powers granted by Parliament were being abused by the present Liberal Government, and that such a Government could not exercise such powers fairly.

"We cannot in these days be guided by a mere spirit of opposition," he declared. "Nor can we accomplish anything if guided by the mere spirit of subservient support. We can have only one great object and one only—to re-inspire and to re-invigorate the war effort of our country in every sphere and phase, and to light into a flaming life the war spirit of our people."

MUSICAL CONCOURS STAKES BIG PRIZES

10th Annual National Competition Offers ¥3,500 Sum With ¥500 as First Honor

The Education Minister's special award and monetary prizes totaling ¥3,500 will be at stake in the 10th annual National Musical Concours which will be held at the Hibiya Public Hall for three days, commencing today, 6 p.m., under the auspices of the Tokyo Nichi-Nichi and the Osaka Mainichi newspapers and with the backing of the Education Ministry and the Board of Information.

Ever since its establishment in 1931, under the auspices of the now defunct Jiji Shimpo newspaper, the annual Musical Concours has been in the center of aspirations and ambitions of the young musicians in this country, and many of those who have won prizes in the Concours in past years are now occupying leading positions in the musical world of Japan. Competition is open to all Japanese regardless of age and educational record although actually only those who were graduated from a music school or have received musical training of similar standing have been able to qualify in the preliminary examinations. A jury composed of the foremost musical authorities in this country, including both foreigners and Japanese, has been responsible for all decisions.

First Prize ¥500

A first prize of ¥500, a second prize of ¥250, and a third prize of ¥100 are distributed independently in each of the four departments of the Concours, including one each for piano, string instruments, vocal music, and musical composition. In addition, a special award created by the Minister of Education is bestowed upon the one most distinguished winner among all departments.

Today's first part of the Concours will bring the decision in the first section of the Composition Department, in which three composers, Gichi Oshima, Hisae Takada, and Isaki Kikuchi, will compete, each with one string Quartet. Their compositions will be played by the Philharmony Quartet, consisting of the following members of the New Symphony Orchestra: Zenzo Matsumoto, first violin; Miss Yukiko Kuwazawa, second violin; Saburo Kiyasu, viola, and Yoritoyo Inoue, cello.

Also at today's first concert, the decision in the Vocal Department will be made. Those competing include three sopranos: Miss Heishuku Kan Miss Kiyoko Otani, and Miss Junnan Ma; two mezzo-sopranos: Miss Aiko Akagi and Miss Yukiko Ishii; one alto: Miss Kiyoko Maruyama; one tenor: Kazuo Yamane; one baritone: Hochin Sai, and two basses; Meiro Kin and Yoshindo Shinohara. They will each sing one prescribed song and one of their own choice. Noteworthy about this year's Concours is the fact that as many as four of the nine vocalists who qualified for the final decision are Chosenese singers.

Thursday's concert will present nine young musicians vying for first place honors in the Piano Department. In addition to a piece of their own choice, they will each have to play Chopin's Etudes in F minor and M major, Opus 25 No. 2 and No. 3. The nine pianists are Hiroe Uehara, Miss Mitsuko Hatagawa, Hiroshi Ito, Miss Natsuko Kanazawa, Miss Kazuko Hibara, Miss Misao Yamada, Miss Ruriko Kato, Miss Akiko Saeki, and Masami Watanabe.

Only 3 in String Section

Only three musicians will compete in the String Department, their performances occupying the first part of the third and last program, Friday evening. The competitors and their pieces de concours are Akihiko Aoki, violin, and Miss Yoko Matsuo, violin, in Mozart's Violin Concerto No. 4 in D major; and Yukitoshi Tsunematsu, cello, in Brecher's Sonata in G major.

The second part of Friday's program will bring the final decision in the second section of the Composition Department. The works by four composers, including a Suite Variee, by Shigeo Sueno; "Peasants," an orchestra piece by Urando Watanabe; "Sakura" Overture, by Shinichi Takada, and Twelve Variations on a Japanese Folk Tune, by Fumihiko Fukui, will be presented by the New Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Kazuo Yamada.

The ceremony of awarding the prizes will be held at the Lecture Hall on the fifth floor of the Tokyo Mainichi building, 5 p.m. Sunday, November 23, followed by a dinner on the eighth floor of the Tonichi Kaikan, 5:30 p.m., which will be attended by the prize winners, the members of the jury and of the committee in charge, and all the winners of the Concours throughout the 10 years of its existence.

TRADE TREATY SIGNED

Germany and Croatia Agree on Exchange of Goods

Transocean

ZAGREB, November 6.—The first treaty of Commerce between Germany and Croatia was signed here yesterday by the German Minister in Zagreb, Herr Kasche, and Dr. Bergemann, the Chairman of the German Government's special committee, on behalf of the Reich and by Dr. Toth, the Croat Minister of Industry and Commerce, for Croatia.

The treaty provides means for the exchange of goods between Croatia and the Reich, as well as between Croatia and German occupied territories, particulary Serbia for the coming fiscal year.

Also a settlement has been reached by Germany and Croatia concerning methods of payment, including the transfer of wages, and questions connected with travel between the two countries.

ONE UNIT DECIDED FOR GOODS DEALERS

Handlers of Liquor, Miso, Soy And Bean Paste to Be United

All dealers of Tokyo in liquor, soy, miso and vinegar will be united into one association as decided by 70 representatives in a meeting Monday afternoon at the Tokyo Branch of the Japan Red Cross Society.

A committee appointed to draft a concrete plan will shortly begin work. Some of the decision reached in the meeting were:

(1) The existing two organizations of Japanese wine dealers in the city will be disbanded in favor of a union to be called "The Tokyo Prefecture Liquors etc. Dealers' Association."

(2) The new organization will make joint stocks of miso, soy, vinegar and liquors other than the Japanese wine. The sale of these goods will also be made jointly.

(3) Among the membership of the new association will be included those dealers whose past years' sales exceeded 70 per cent of their annual stocks. The dealers found closing their shops as of October 1, this year, will be disqualified. Those called to colors will be excluded from the latter category.

(4) The new association will have its operation fund of ¥600,000 to be paid up with ¥100 by each member.

(5) The organization will have its branch offices each within the jurisdiction of a taxation office. The branches will be established each within the jurisdiction of a police station.

(6) Those dealers disqualified to join the association will have their business sold over to the organization. The prices will be decided by the association in accordance with the records shown by these dealers in the past.

Thus it will be before long that about 11,000 shops in Tokyo selling wine will be united into one to smooth out the distribution of liquors and other daily necessities among the Tokyo people.

RALPH INGERSOLL WRITES OF SOVIET EXAGGERATION

PM Editor Says Facts Confused With Fiction in Russian Military Reports

Transocean

BUENOS AIRES, November 6.—Ralph Ingersoll, editor of the newspaper PM in New York and presently a special war correspondent in Russia, asserted in an article published by La Prensa here this morning that the Soviet Government had not been able to separate fact from fiction in its military communiques.

A comparison between the German and Soviet military reports disclosed that the Soviet High Command had frequently kept silent about the fall of cities for as long as 10 days.

But since the Soviet Government has had to publish so much bad news, it is understandable that it should try to give this bitter medicine to its people in small doses.

Soviet reports alleging naval victories are purely "wish fantasies." If after they drop a depth charge in the water an oil spot appears on the surface, they take for granted that an enemy submarine has been sunk. Of course this proves nothing since U-boats often discharge a little oil into the water in order to fool their pursuers.

Furthermore, Soviet reports on the number of planes they have shot down are never correct. Indeed they are exaggerated so much that they might be described as hallucinations, Ralph Ingersoll concluded.

MINNESOTANS WIN; STANFORD BEATEN

Pacific Coast Conference Race Upset—Notre Dame Keeps Up Winning Streak

United Press

NEW YORK, November 15.—Bernie Bierman's undefeated Minnesota Gophers continued their drive toward the mythical national championship today with a 34 to 13 decision over the University of Iowa eleven, thereby gaining undisputed command of the Big Nine title race.

In the Far West, the University of Washington Cougars scored a stunning 14 to 13 upset over Stanford University, throwing the Pacific Coast Conference race into a muddle with both clubs tied for top position despite previous defeats. The scrambled title race was even more confusing since the championship club usually represents the west in the Rose Bowl clash on New Year's Day.

Notre Dame Wins

Notre Dame kept its win streak clean with a 7 to 6 win over burly Northwestern in the major game of the day, but the Ramblers have a scoreless tie with Army to mar their record.

Army, which started out the season with great hopes and then crumbled against Harvard, 20 to 6, suffered its second straight defeat when Pennsylvania administered a 14 to 7 trouncing.

Pittsburgh, still fired by their brilliant 13 to 0 win over the Fordham Rams last week, took on the Nebraska Cornhuskers and eked out a sweet 14 to 7 win that enabled the Panthers to top off an otherwise inglorious season.

Duquesne managed to keep its undefeated, united record intact by smashing Mississippi State, 16 to 0, in the only defeat that Mississippi has suffered this year.

The undefeated Duke Blue Devils kept their slate clean by trouncing North Carolina, 20 to 0, but Coach Wallace Wade previously had announced his team would not accept any bid to a Bowl game this year.

Cornell trounced its old rival, Dartmouth, 33 to 19, while Princeton took the traditional Ivy League clash with Yale, 20 to 6. Harvard scored a smashing 23 to 7 victory over Brown. The Green Wave from Tulane swept north and snowed under the Violets from New York University, 45 to 0.

48,000 Jam Stadium

Forty-eight thousand fans jammed the stadium at Evanston for the Irish-Northwestern game—a sell-out contest played under a bright sun.

The Wildcats opened strongly in the first period with Otto Graham bearing the burden of the offense, throwing pass after pass to Bob Motl, ace Northwestern end. The passing combination continually kept Notre Dame in hot water and threatened by a score until Steve Juzwik, Notre Dame half, intercepted the ball on his own seven-yard stripe.

A few plays later, the Wildcats again got the ball and started thundering down the field. Clarence Hasse, Northwestern end, out maneuvered Juzwik, who was playing safety, and got behind the Notre Dame man as Graham uncorked a long floater. Hasse was in clear territory for a score but dropped the ball on the Irish 25-yard line.

Both teams tightened up on their defense in the second period, but the Northwestern club again threatened until Bernie Crimmins, Notre Dame fullback, picked off one of Graham's heaves on the Irish 25-yard line.

Notre Dame turned on the heat in the third quarter, with Angelo Bertelli, the Irish triple-threat star, passing Northwestern dizzy. Bertelli uncorked one to Wright that was good for 19 yards, and then tossed a bullet heave to Bolger and the latter crashed over for the score. Juzwik split the uprights on the try-for-point, and Notre Dame took a 7 to 0 lead.

Northwestern bounced back into the game with a 60-yard drive that finally sent Graham crashing over the final stripe from the four-yard line, and the Wildcats had a chance to tie the score. Wright, from his defensive wing position, knifed through, however, and blocked the kick enabling the Irish to hold a 7 to 6 lead.

The Wildcats again stormed down the field in the fourth quarter, marching 58 yards to the Irish 14-yard line where they were stopped cold. Dick Erdlitz, substitute, Northwestern back, tried for a field goal but missed.

Fearing an upset in the last quarter, the Irish punched over and around Northwestern to reach the Wildcats' one-yard line but lost the ball there on downs. They held Northwestern in defensive territory, however, for the remainder of the game.

70,000 See Game

Seventy thousand rabid Army and Pennsylvania fans took advantage of a sunshiny day to watch Pennsylvania humble the Cadets at Philadelphia, 14 to 7.

Army started out like a championship club, driving to Pennsylvania's 25-yard line in straight plays through the line. Unable to make headway, the Cadets took to the air and Pennsylvania's crack halfback, Don Bitler, intercepted the heave to stave off a score.

The Cadets roared back into the game in the second period to reach Pennsylvania's 24-yard line before losing the pigskin on downs. Army again took the ball on a punt and drove back downfield. On an attempted pass for a touchdown, the Quaker back, Gifford, intercepted the ball on his four-yard line.

Army again utilized their air strength in the third period, but Bert Stiff, Pennsylvania fullback, took a short one on his finger-tips and raced back 16 yards to Army's 41-yard line before he was downed.

With paydirt in sight, Pennsylvania turned on the power and drove straight through the line in successive plays with Stiff finally scoring on a power dive through the middle from Army's three-yard line.

Pennsylvania kept the Army bottled up in defensive territory throughout the first of the fourth period, and Johnny Welsh finally took advantage of a break to race 12 yards on a reverse for the second Pennsylvania score—giving Penn a 14 to 0 lead.

Returns 83 Yards

Army's crack halfback, Mazur, put his club back into the running with an 83-yard return of a punt that was good for a score. The run was one of the sweetest of the year as Army blockers mowed down Pennsylvania tacklers, enabling Mazur to break through and then reverse his field for the final dash.

Army took the ball deep in its own territory and marched through and around Pennsylvania to reach the Quakers' 14-yard stripe, but Stiff intercepted an Army pass and staved off a possible tying score.

Colgate and Syracuse fought to a bitter 19 to 19 tie in a struggle at Syracuse that was one of the best games of the day.

Bill Geyer, Colgate halfback, opened the scoring when he dashed 20 yards to hit pay-dirt for the first time. Syracuse, however, banged back into the game when Michael ran 58 yards but found himself stopped on the four-yard line. Taking the ball on the next play, however, Michael plunged through the line for the four yards and the tying score.

With Colgate leading Syracuse, 13 to 12, at half time both clubs found themselves bogged down in midfield throughout the entire third quarter.

In the fourth quarter, however, Colgate's triple-threat artist, Hanover, tossed a short pass to Furey who ran 25 yards for the score and Colgate had a 19 to 12 lead that looked unbeatable.

With 45 seconds of the game remaining, Leland "Bunky" Morris, the 147-pound triple-threat Syracuse star threw off his wraps and took a punt 74 yards for the score—as pretty a piece of open-field running as has been seen in the east this year.

McPhail, Syracuse back, Leveled his toe on the uprights and split them squarely to give his club a 19 to 19 tie as the gun sounded ending the game.

Waseda and Nichidai Gridiron Tilt Moved From Nov. 21 to 26

The football game between the elevens of Waseda and Nichidai scheduled for Friday, November 21, has been postponed to Wednesday, November 26, the officials of the Kanto Intercollegiate Football League announced Wednesday. ROOSEVELT AND STALIN LIKENED TO EACH OTHER

Former Governor of Oklahoma Says Former About to Imitate Latter

Transocean

NEW YORK, November 13.—The hearts of President Roosevelt and Comade Stalin beat in harmony: What is more the American chief executive is about to imitate the governmental methods of his peer in Moscow, William Murray, former Governor of Oklahoma, declared in an address published by the New York Journal-American this morning.

The speech was delivered by Mr. Murray before a meeting of the American First Committee.

He ridiculed the military experts who spoke of the invincibility of the Soviet Army at a time when it was being beaten by the Germans in every battle.

"Stalin makes his own laws: Roosevelt violates the laws of the United States. So what is the difference between the two?" Mr. Murray continued.

He added that President Roosevelt had ruined the Democratic Party and stated that "it is below our dignity to follow President Roosevelt's foreign and domestic policies."

HELSINKI, November 14.—All papers here yesterday published a map of Soviet Karelia, which was handed by the Finnish Foreign Minister, Rolf Witting, to the United States Minister here together with the Finnish reply.

The map with the attached explanation shows the preparations made by the Soviet Union in these territories for an attack in a westerly direction and describes in details railways, airdromes and roads built by the Soviets in this region before and after the peace of Moscow.

The explanation attached to the map concludes as follows: All this, railways, roads and airdromes of eastern Karelia—as the winter war as well as the present war showed—forms a gigantic base built for a blow to be launched against Finland and Scandinavia.

A.A.U. to Submit 193 U.S. Records; Highest Number Made by Hawaii Swimmer

United Press

NEW YORK, November 14.—The American Amateur Athletic Union announced today that its Chairman, Paul R. Jordan, will submit 193 American records to the 53rd annual convention opening its three-day session at Philadelphia tomorrow.

The highest number of records, 20, belongs to Hawaii's 17-year-old Bill Smith, followed by Adolph Kiefer of Chicago with 15.

Men track and field athletes top the list with 66 records, while women swimmers have 64 new records and men swimmers 53. The marks if accepted automatically become new American records.

Two of Smith's marks, if accepted, will go to the International Swimming Federation as world records. These were 2:07.6 for the 220-yard distance and 4:38.5 for the 440-yard distance, both of them breaking the free style figures formerly held by Jack Medica of Seattle.

A total of 400 delegates from 41 district associations, together with representatives of the Athletic Federations in Cuba and the Philippines, will gather at the convention.

DIMAGGIO ACCLAIMED AS MOST VALUABLE

Yankee Sparkplug Earns Coveted Title 2nd Time—Camilli for Other Circuit

United Press

NEW YORK, November 14.—Twenty-four members of the Baseball Writers' Association yesterday chose Joe DiMaggio, slugging Yankee center fielder, as the American League's most valuable player for the 1941 season.

The Association selected Dolph Camilli of the Dodgers as the most valuable player in the National League.

It was the second time since the youthful Californian outfielder joined the Yankee forces in 1936 in his Major League debut that DiMaggio has gained the coveted title. He was selected as the American League's most valuable player in 1939.

DiMaggio batted a cool .358 during the season just ended to take second place in the American League hitting averages, trailing Ted Williams of the Red Sox who chalked up a phenomenal .406 average for the year.

DiMaggio led the American League in runs batted in by collecting 125, poled out 30 home-runs, was second behind Ted Williams in runs scored with 121, and was third in the hits scored column with 191.

DiMaggio climaxed what was probably his greatest year in organized baseball by cracking wide open the all-time record for consecutive games with hits. The young Yankee star hit safely in 56 consecutive games before Jim Bagby and portly Al Smith of the Cleveland Indians stopped the rampage on July 17 after DiMaggio had broken the 44-year-old record established by Willke Keeler, greatest to Brooklyn's all-time stars, who had hit safely in 44 games.

DiMaggio not only broke the record, but did it the hard way with a 400-foot-long home run against Boston, on July 3. DiMaggio continued hitting successfully for in more games, and at the end of that streak had garnered a total of 91 safe blows.

DiMaggio thus cemented for all time the fame he has gained as one of the Yankees' greatest all-round stars, which earned him the title of "the man who made the Yankees."

Before the arrival of DiMaggio, the Yankees despite a fairly well-balanced club and an array of good hitters, were unable to get much further than second place in the American League. After DiMaggio became a centerfield fixture, the Yankees won four straight pennants, a record achievement.

NEW NAZI BOMBER TYPE MAKES SUCCESSFUL RAID

Dornier Planes Sink Freighters and Chase Away Spitfires

Transocean

BERLIN, November 12.—A number of a new type Dornier bomber planes started Monday on their maiden trip against British shipping.

"The crews of the new planes had been looking forward with keen expectation to the premiere of these new bombers," writes German war correspondent Robert Schiffmann relating his experiences during this trip.

"At last the hour to start arrived on Monday afternoon. After having crossed the Channel our machine cautiously approached the southeastern coast of Britain. Very close to the coast we suddenly discovered two large vessels, which upon closer inspection turned out to be fully loaded freighters.

"Braving heavy anti-aircraft fire, we succeeded in scoring several direct hits with heavy caliber bombs. On leaving the scene we could only see the bows of the vessels still appearing above the surface of the water.

"Several Spitfire planes which tried to block our way on our flight home, were put to flight with our board weapons."

LOUIS WANTS FIGHTS DESPITE ENLISTMENT

Slated for Army But Will Climb Through Ropes When Jacobs Finds Challenger

By Jack Mahon

I.N.S

NEW YORK, November 5.—Have we seen the last of Joe Louis, the heavyweight champion of the world? You and I hope not, but we have really little to say in a world gone mad and if, heaven forbid, what is to come prevents us from watching the famed Brown Bomber in action again, just keep this little record of the greatest heavyweight champion of the generation.

Joe Louis, you see, is going into the Army. Going in as a private citizen answering his country's call, and passing up a job that has paid him $40,000 a year or so for the last six years. With no excuses.

He wouldn't make one if he could—he is not that way. He never made an excuse or offered an alibi as a ghter and he was the fightingest champion ever to draw on a pair of those lethal leather mittens.

Remember that Joe Louis, 27, son of an Alabama cotton picker, fought for and won the world's title from Jimmy Braddock in June 1937 and after that put it on the line against exactly 19 opponents before submitting to his draft physical examination a few weeks ago.

Joe Met All Comers

In that time Louis barred no one; he met the tall ones, the small ones, the stand-up straight guys, the sluggers, the boxers and the runners. He fought in all parts of the country and never asked any special type of opponent.

For the past seven months he has averaged a fight a month and because he was so good the campaign was labeled the "Bum of the Month club." It scarcely could be construed as the champion's fault if the opposition was not up to his own standard.

Here's Louis' complete record as champion; Title defenses 19; won 19 lost 0. Knockouts 17 decisions two, one over Arturo Godoy (15 rounds; he stopped Godoy in return bout) and one over Tommy Farr (whom he never fought again.)

In addition to his phenomenal ring record, Louis has attracted considerable popularity by his behavior outside the ring. The only time the breath of scandal even tinged his private life was a month or so ago when his wife sued for divorce.

The case went into the Chicago courts and never was completed, Mr. and Mrs. Louis being reconciled.

Champion Will Not Retire

Joe has insisted he will not retire from the ring until he gets a few more fights under his belt and was equally insistent that he would not ask for any furloughs from the Army in which to fight. He says he will fight if promoter Mike Jacobs can get him a good match and will also make the overtures necessary to secure Louis a leave of absence.

Joe does not smoke, has never been heard to swear and is extremely charitable. He is regarded as the idol of his race—and justly so.

Here's hoping Joe Louis will climb between the ropes again next Summer. We see all too few like him.

A new law will be promulgated for this purpose.

According to available information, this decree will provide for the establishment of economic and cultural bureaus which will limit their activities to the territories under Spanish sovereignty; while the secretariat of the High Commissioner will extend its activities over the whole of the protectorate.

Furthermore, a new department to act as liaison between the High Commissioner and the Spanish Government will be organized.

Wrestler Deserts Army

Transocean

HELSINKI, November 13.—The famous Estonian heavyweight wrestler, Christian Palusalu, who won two gold medals at the Olympic games in Berlin in 1936, has deserted from the Soviet Army in eastern Karelia and reached Finnish lines, according to reports received here from the front. Palusalu declared that he had been arrested by the Soviets after an anti-Soviet demonstration in Estonia and taken to the interior of Russia. In August this year he attempted to escape together with another Estonian.

REDS ARE DECEITFUL ON AIRPLANE LOSSES

Soviets Exaggerate German Figures While Minimizing Their Own, D.N.B. Says

In modern warfare, the air force plays a role of such importance that the loss and production ratio of planes is of fundamental influence on the military position of a country at war, says D.N.B.

For this reason Soviet propaganda, announcing stupendous German aerial losses, tells of low German plane production, and at the same time remains completely silent about its own losses.

The attempt to make the Soviet position appear better than it really is results in a grotesquely contorted picture and even the casual observer cannot but doubt its veracity.

However, it seems that the Soviets are more determined to convince themselves and their own people than they are to convince the British or American public whose help they hope to get.

Not reality, but wishful dreaming is expressed in the figures which Soviet propaganda employs in deceiving the world. According to these figures Germany had lost some 8,000 planes, by the commencement of the Russian campaign, whereas the first 10 weeks of the war in Russia cost them—so the Soviets claim—more than 7,200 planes.

Reuters' Computation

Even Reuters, who usually exaggerate tremendously, compute German losses in the Russian campaign at only 4,000 planes.

It is interesting to note that although the Reds never mention the exact figures of their own losses, they do not deny British reports which claim that Soviet losses are about the same as those of the enemy. This British admission is all the more significant, since there are British military observers in Russia. It may be assumed that this statement comes from them. Remembering, the usual ratio of truth and facts in British reports, this must mean that Soviet losses are by far the worst.

There is not the slightest inkling of doubt anywhere in the world that the German air force has a vast technical and strategical superiority over its enemy. Thus the public can easily comprehend the enormous extent of Soviet losses. At any rate, the figure at which any observer must arrive after careful estimation is just about the figure declared by the German High Command, calculating the Russian losses in the air at about 10,000 planes.

Nevertheless, Russian propaganda indulges in dreaming, and after sufficiently juggling with alleged German losses, it expounds in reams of nonsense on Germany's capacity of production.

Even with German airplane factories working at full capacity, Moscow still asserts that they are unable to catch up with the "enormous" losses. According to them, the inexhaustible strength of Russian war industry is mounting from day to day.

If in the face of such naive assertion, one would assume the losses of German planes before the Russian campaign to be 7,000 planes, and 8,000 during the Eastern campaign, thus arriving at a total of 17,000 planes, then, even under the most unfavorable conditions for Germany, German production capacity would be able to supply planes to a number for which the Soviet Union would have no equal.

American Figures

Perhaps it may be best to refer to U. S. estimates which could certainly not be accused of partiality toward Germany, considering the present attitude taken by the United States Government. Recently the New York Times, in an article by Frederic Graham, put the monthly German building capacity at 3,000 to 6,000 planes. Let us assume that the very least, 3,000 planes, were produced monthly since the commencement of the present conflict. We would then have a total of 70,000 planes manufactured. Adding to this the standing force of 10,000 planes before the war commenced, there remains even after reduction of the asserted losses of 17,000 planes computed by Soviet propaganda, a remainder of 50,000-60,000 planes at Germany's disposal in the battle against England and Soviet Russia.

It may be safely assumed that Russia can by no means put forth nearly as many planes. After considering that the German army has now taken possession of a large part of Russian production centers, it becomes all the more obvious, on what a weak foundation the Russian assertion is based, when they claim that the inexhaustible strength of the Soviet Union mounts daily.

FIVE SPORTS EVENTS SLATED AT Y.C.A.C.

Intra-Club Men's Hockey Game Scheduled This Afternoon

Five or more games in four different sports will be played in the Yokohama Country and Athletic Club this weekend, excluding the matches in the club's autumn tennis tournament.

This afternoon there will be an intra-club men's hockey game and a ladies' basketball contest, while the male cagers may also get into action. The club's rugby squad will have a match on Sunday morning and in the afternoon both the first and second soccer teams are booked to play outside teams.

Both the Y.C. and A.C. hockey elevens were scheduled to meet non-club combinations this afternoon, but with the opposition having cancelled the contests on Friday there will be a pick up game instead. All players of the two squads as well as others interested in hockey are being asked to turn out to ensure there being two full sides for the match, scheduled for 2:30 p.m. today.

The club ladies will hold a practice from 2 p.m., prior to the men's game. The Motomachi Girls' Higher School basketball team will oppose the Y.C. and A.C. lady casaba players on the letters' court at 4 p.m. today. The club men cagers may also have a game after the tilt between the quintettes has been completed.

The Y.C. and A.C.'s unbeaten and untied rugby team will be out Sunday morning after their sixth consecutive victory against the C.D. Club, a fifteen from Tokyo. The players from the capital are reputed to be a strong combination and it is expected the home team will have a hard contest on its hands. The kickoff will be at 11 a.m.

Two soccer games Sunday afternoon will close the weekend program. First to take the field after luncheon will be the Y.C. and A.C. second eleven. This team also has five victories to its credit this season, with no ties or defeats to mar its record to date. The seconds will have a match against the Yokohama Third Middle School squad at 2 p.m.

The club's first association football team, whose record stands at three victories, one tie and no defeats this autumn, will face another strong eleven from Tokyo this weekend, as it did last Sunday. Little-Known Feature Of Noh Masks Pictured respect the masks of the noh drama.

In point of expression, although some of them, like those of the gigaku dance, represents strongly impassioned features, most of them are marked by features designed or developed purely as decorative patterns or as ornamental pieces for the stage, taking an intermediate position between the gigaku masks and the noh masks of the early period.

In fact, it must be admitted the noh masks of the earlier period, do show to some extent the influence of the bugaku masks, and that some noh masks were not uninfluenced even by the gigaku masks. But the type of noh mask with which I am particularly concerned is a native creation pure and simple, without any trace of influence of either gigaku or bugaku masks. These masks which are at first sight of so neutral an expression as to be described as "non-expressive," but which, worn by capable actors, become full of expression, deep, various and moving, can be seen nowhere else in the world. Their creation must be credited to the genius of the race which has so often and so unjustly been accused of lack of originality. And as works of artistic achievement, these unique masks of the noh drama merit the highest praise.

Listeners Impressed

When during my European tour I reviewed the development of noh mask making in Japan before audiences interested in the theater, many of my listeners were deeply impressed and described them as the supreme achievement of the mask-making art. I always had with me some masks which I had brought from Japan and I tried to demonstrate how they might be used on the stage.

Most unfortunately, however, I am no noh player, so I had to content myself only with manipulating them by hand. My demonstration would have been far more striking and convincing had I been a noh player or known how to wear the masks and show them to better advantage and to full effect. Most unfortunately, I repeat, because noh masks become lifeless and expressionless if placed on the table or in a show case, so in the same way they express nothing when they are held up for inspection with untrained hands. Noh masks come to life only when worn by well-accomplished players.

To Warn People of Times

This is not a stage coach, but a "School Coach", a unique enterprise launched by the Street School Society at Mukojima, Honjo-ku. Under the support of the Imperial Rule Assistance Association, the society has built this outstanding coach and for four days commencing today, the coach will go around various parks in the city, where it will be shown to public inspection. The idea is to emphasize to the public the necessity of rice saving and to inculcate correct understanding of the prevailing situation by means of posters and newspapers pasted on the four sides of the coach. Slides and music records also will be employed by the coach for its purpose. The coach drawn by a donkey is six feet wide, 11 feet deep and 11 feet high and is shown before the office of the I.R.A.A.

NEW YORK CHILDREN LIBRARIAN RETIRES

Beloved Anne Carroll Moore, at Age of 70, Quits Work She Began in 1906

Mrs Anne Carroll Moore, Superintendent of Work with Children at the New York Public Library, retired on September 1 after 35 years of guiding juvenile readers, who are just as fond of "Tom Sawyer," "Mother Goose, and "Alice in Wonderland" today as they were when Miss Moore began her work in 1906.

The radio, motion pictures and comic strips have not altered children's fundamental tastes in reading, Miss Moore said in an interview with the New York Herald Tribune in her book-crowded office as she reviewed the past from her retirement age of 70 and looked to a future of free-lance writing and lecturing.

"Even the 'Swiss Family Robinson' goes on and on and on," she said. "Perhaps the fact that it was Franklin D. Roosevelt's childhood favorite and was dramatized as such has had something to do with it, but the book stands well on its own."

In 1906, when official who were tired of running of Brooklyn to observe Miss Moore's work for children at the Pratt Institute Free Library induced her to cross the bridge and take charge of children's reading in New York, there were 36 children's branch libraries in Manhattan, the Bronx and Staten Island, with 125,103 volumes and a circulation of 1,871,800. Last year there were 47 branches in the three boroughs over which Miss Moore has jurisdiction, and the number of volumes had grown to 365,721, with a circulation of 3,202,011.

Successor Mrs. Sayers

Miss Moore's successor at the central library, Fifth Avenue and Forty-second Street, will be Mrs. Frances Clarke Sayers, of Galveston, Tex., who worked with Miss Moore from 1918 to 1923 and for the last five years has been lecturing on children's books at the University of California Library School, Berkeley, California.

Mrs. Sayers was graduated from the Carnegie Library School, Pittsburgh, in 1917. Before that she attended the University of Texas at Austin.

The central children's room at the library has had many foreign refugees among its regular visitors since the war began.

Adults come in as well, Miss Moore said, many just to make sure that books they loved in childhood are still on the shelves.

She remembers the instant popularity of the children's room when it was started in 1906 at the Muhlenberg branch library, 200 west Twenty-third Street, and after it moved in 1911 to the present building, which opened in that year.

"In that era the room was a potent factor with foreign-born children who couldn't speak English," Miss Moore said. "The story-telling hours, which began then and continue now, were a delightful introduction to our literature and a valuable educational element. Children from the lower East Side would stand in line and snatch American histories from the shelves as fast as they could."

Miss Moore said she thought this country has gone a long way toward feeding children's stomachs, but not far enough in feeding their minds. In her opinion, there are too many "devices, formulas and systems" in our education, with the result that "fences have been put up around reading."

"The radio? Like the movies, it has increased the number of child readers but has made children far more critical than adults in seeing that the films are up to the books."

Down the years the most popular books with children, Miss Moore said, have been these: Andrew Lang's "Blue Fairy Book," "Little Women," "Alice in Wonderland," "Tom Sawyer," "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," Grimm's Fairy Tales, Hans Anderson's Tales, "Mother Goose," "Johnny Crow's Garden," by L. Leslie Brook; "Swiss Family Robinson," "Robinson Crusoe" and "Mysterious Island." The Horatio Alger books are falling off.

Miss Moore was born at Limerick, York County, Maine. She has traveled through most of Europe and the United States in the interest of children's libraries and has trained many women in the field.

From 1924 to 1930 she conducted a column, "The Three Owls," for young readers in "Books," weekly literary supplement of The New York Herald Tribune. In 1940 she received the Constance Lindsay Skinner gold medal for "outstanding work as a pioneer in the field of better books for children."

She dislikes committees and the only one she can remember serving on was the Children's Librarians section of the American Library Association. She was its first chairman in 1900.

Now at 70, Miss Moore's hair is graying. But she has a twinkle in her eyes and says she doesn't feel at all "retired." Beginning in January, she will lecture at the University of California.

HANDEL'S MESSIAH TO BE SUNG AGAIN

Ugo Nakata to Lead Tokyo Volunteer Choir for 10th Consecutive Yule Season

The Tokyo Volunteer choir under the leadership of Ugo Nakata for the tenth consecutive Christmas season will sing Handel's Messiah at the Hibiya Public Hall December 5. Mr. Nakata first got together a mere handful of singers to sing this great oratorio in 1931.

That first year they used the Tokyo Union Church but the following year moved to the Y.M.C.A. auditorium which was used for two years. By that time the membership of the volunteer chorus had grown and likewise the popularity of these annual renditions of the Messiah, so far the next five years Tokyo residents filled the Nippon Seinenkan. The year war broke out, 1939, Mr. Nakata gave the Messiah in the chapel of St. Paul's University but to his and every one's surprise the place was so crowded that every available inch of space was filled, many even sitting on the radiators, which were boiling hot, and crowds simply had to go home without hearing the chorus at all. Since then the Hibiya Public Hall has been used.

Given to Social Groups

As Handel himself used the proceeds of the first concerts he gave for benevolence, Mr. Nakata and his chorus have given all the money gained over and above bare expenses to various organizations. Among those to which these gifts have been donated are, the Methodist Social Service work, the Kobokan, St. Christopher's Settlement, and the White Cross Tuberculosis work.

Membership in the choir is entirely voluntary as the name signifies but is now called the "Tokyo Seigaku (Sacred Music) Gassho Dan." It is entirely self-supporting each member pays 50 sen a month membership fee. The choir has given its services freely for many organizations and churches in both Tokyo anl Yokohama. They have sung for the Seventh Day Adventist Church, the Salvation Army, for Evensong at St. Margaret's College, and for the leper hospital at Murayama and plan to go to the tuberculosis hospital at Murayama as soon as the new chapel there is finished, and other places.

During the past nine years the choir has sung practically all of the great oratorios, beginning with Handel's Messiah, Hayden's Creation and The Elijah.

Mr. Nakata is very particular about the high standard of music as well as the friendships held between the choir members. Each member must be above high school age and since they sing in all languages each member must be a high school graduate and be able to read some English.

Some of the choir members have gone abroad for study and have been able to join big choirs in the United States by virtue of having sung the great oratorios in Japan under Mr. Nakata's baton. It is a matter of gratification to Mr. Nakata to learn that some have been accepted without even being given a test.

Five Years in U.S.

Ugo Nakata spent five years in the United States specializing in church music under the best teachers, among whom was Dr. Williamton of Westminster Choir, in whose home Mr. Nakata lived and received great personal help. He then went to Chicago Music College where he received his degree of B. M. (Bachelor of Music). It was always his intention to return to Japan and be of service to his own country through the medium of church music.

During the winter of 1927 and '28 he and his wife spent four months in England taking music lessons, hearing the great oratorios, attending concerts, and churches where the famous choirs were singing, thus gaining assurance for the task he had set for himself and authority for doing the work he wished to do upon his return to Japan. The success of his accomplishments has been amply demonstrated by the performances of the volunteer chorus.

The Messiah will be sung by the chorus the evening of December 5 in the Hibiya Public Hall. The soloists this year are; Mr. Hyun, Doctor of Music at Christian College, Keijo, Chosen; Miss Porter, Miyagi College music department, Sendai; Miss Kohno, who has sung the alto parts for the choir for the past eight years; and Arnold Bauer, of Musashino Music School.

FOUR BRITISH PLANES BAGGED IN HALF-HOUR

German Pursuit Craft November 6 Gain Nod in Duel Over Channel

Transocean

BERLIN, November 8.—German pursuit planes within half an hour brought down four British planes over the Channel.

This occurred on November 6, when four British raiders launched an attack at 1:30 p.m. Nothing but the remains of the machines could be seen scattered on the beach by 2 p.m.

"The fight with the last of the British raiders was highly thrilling," the Captain of the German squadron told a reporter. "We were in hot pursuit of this machine and came so close to it that we could almost touch it. Then our machine-guns began hammering. Three volleys accomplished our work. The British machine was fully ablaze. It exploded and fragments of metal whirled around our plane."

The Captain further reported that he suddenly observed a glaring light on one of the wings of his plane.

"I did not trust my eyes," he said "was our machine burning? Then I saw that the rubber boat of the British plane had fallen ablaze on our wing. What remained of the rubber boat we carried home as trophy."

To Lead Choir

Ugo Nakata, head of the Tokyo Volunteer Choir.

Record Reviews

(All the records reviewed here are Columbia issues.)

Schubert: Quartet No. 15, in G Major (Op. 161); Kolisch String Quartet; Four 12" Special Blue-Label Records, JW 642-645, ¥3.65 each. Masterworks Set No. 368. ¥14.60

Of Schubert's 15 string quartets the last three (the A minor, the D minor and the G major) are the greatest. The G major is curiously modern and seems to indicate a new departure of which we were not destined to see the further outcome. In it we do not find the overflowing melody of the A minor nor anything so beautiful as the "Death and the Maiden" variations of the D minor. Yet this G major quartet is of great interest in the first three movements and it is only in the fourth movement that the composer's inspiration seems to have failed.

The quartet is very dramatic. There are strong dynamic contrasts, frequent tremolo, and a constant sense of urgency and distress. The cellist plays a prominent part and has been given some lovely tunes in the second movement and in the Trio of the Scherzo.

mencmfwcmfwy cmfwypcmfwy cmfw

The first movement (Allegro molto moderato) begins with a swelling crescendo on the opening chord. The tonality throughout is constantly shifting. This movement occupies three sides. The second movement (Andante un poco mto) is notable for the beauty of the long melody sung by the cello, here given a splendid showing. The music is stormy at times, with almost orchestral effects, and the use of tremolo makes it melodramatic rather than dramatic. The third movement (Scherzo: Allegro vivace, and Trio: Allegretto) contains much harmonic and rhythmic ingenuity. The Trio is a lovely cello tune, wholly charming. The fourth movement (Allegro Assai) is a sort of Schubertian "Tarantella" and though perhaps exciting to the performers is not pleasant to listen to.

The first three movements are undoubtedly the best and fill us with wonder at the inventive resource of a composer on whose tomb was inscribed, "Here lies buried a rich treasure but still fairer hopes." The Kolisch Quartet have provided an excellent performance which has been well recorded.

Prokofieff: Classical Symphony in D Major (Op. 25). In 3 parts. Mendelssohn: Scherzo from Octet (Op. 20). The Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dimitri Mitropoulos. Two 12" Special Blue-Label Records, JW 640-641, ¥3.65 each. Masterworks Set No. 367.

A symphony occupying only three sides is a rarity. The first movement is marked Allegro, the second Larghetto, the third (unlike classical practics, a Gavotte) Non troppo allegro, and the Finale, Molto vivace.

Prokofieff was born in 1891 and this work was composed in 1916-17. It is, therefore, the work of a young man of 25, young music, likeable and tuneful, but without depth and substance. It is superficially charming but lacking in sincerity. The composer seems to have had the idea that it is quite easy to write like Mozart or Haydn, but the tunes are by no means original; they are too reminiscent of other classical works.

If a composer tackles the symphonic form he ought to be ready for big thinking, and Prokofieff fails here. The final dance is the best of the whole symphony. The Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra have done their share well.

As a fill-up we have the Scherzo (third movement) of Mendelssohn's Octet in E flat. This composer's sherzos are usually good and this is no exception. Its brisk urbanity is pleasing and the writing for eight parts admirable.

The Orchestre Raymonde, which used to broadcast from London a few years ago and which is entirely British in spite of its French-sounding name, provides an interesting study in dance composition (on a 10" black-label record, JX 287, ¥1.70), the composers being Lanner and Strauss. Lanner was really the father of the Viennese waltz, which was brought to such perfection by the second of the three Strausses bearing the name Johann. The titles are (for the Lanner piece) "Romantique" and (for the Strauss) "Tritsch, Tratsch-Polka". The former introduces that soulless (because mechanical) instrument the electronde. Both sides are pleasant pieces which take the listener back to those gay times in Prague and Vienna which now seem to utterly remote.

antipathy. He was told to have spoken disrespectfully of the Church, and the result was the promulgation of a bull by Pope Alexander in 1409 which ordered the abjuration of all heresies. But Hus continued his theological work, supported by the national popular feeling.

While the king, the queen and the nobles applied for him, the Pope announced a new ban which included the whole city of Prague. Hus was now forced to leave the town, he isolated himself more and more and when he published his famous book, "On the Church," his destiny was decided. In order to finish with the reformator, clerical and political circles invited him to be present at the council of Constance. He got the well-known "safe conduct" which promised that Hus should be allowed to return safely to his Bohemian country, independent from whatever judgment might be passed on him. The treachery of King Sigismund was obvious and admitted by the king himself.

Soon after his arrival, Hus was arrested and intentionally deprived of making his own defense. Still he had an opportunity to save his life. The council demanded that Hus should frankly declare his errors by recantication. He firmly declined and the sentence of death was promulgated in the presence of Sigismund. He remonstrated in vain, and when he understood the hopelessness of his case, he betook himself to silent prayer and died with the utmost courage and firmness.

While his life was always restless and in commotion, his death became the point of departure of his glory, and even his fiercest enemies had to admit his sincerity and greatness. He survives in our memory not so much as an argumentative heretic, but more as an immortal witness of spiritual perseverance.

Turkey As Mediator

Colonel Franz von Papen, German Ambassador to Turkey, according to the New York Times correspondent at Ankara whose dispatch was transmitted here by the Asahi, said at an interview with the representative of La Vangardia Espanolla of Spain on November 16 that there was some possibility of Germany calling on Turkey as a peace mediator for Europe. In the event, he is quoted to have said, that Germany has achieved a decisive turn in the European war situation, the German Government may make through Turkey a strong offer of peace to Britain. He was further quoted to have observed to the effect that should Britain agree to German dominance in Middle and Eastern Europe and to the new order under German auspices, then Germany would give Britain a free hand through the whole area of western Europe.

The statement with which the German Ambassador to Turkey is credited does not make it clear what would be regarded as "a decisive turn" in the war situation. The German military command on November 9 made known that the losses inflicted on the Soviet army to that date amounted to some 300 divisions of trained troops or between 7 and 8 millions of regular effectives and proportional amounts of armament. With no longer any serious fear of large scale counter operations on the part of the Soviet troops, some portions of German forces were reported being withdraw from where there is no need of large concentrations of forces.

The intelligence mentioned above had been sent from Berlin and therefore presumably passed by German censorship. What is noteworthy is the fact that the German authorities have permitted information of such complexion to go out of the country at this juncture. In this connection it is of importance to note that the Yomiuri correspondent at Berlin under date of November 17 wired that Chancellor Hitler had announced his plan that the Soviet territory wherein hostilities had virtually come to a close would constitute the "eastern territory" of the Reich and be placed under the jurisdiction of the "Eastern Ministry," Alfred Rosenberg, acknowledged authority on Russian affairs, being appointed its head.

The unmistakable indication is that Germany's constructive program is already getting under way in that part of Soviet Russia in which military operations have terminated. This appears quite probable if Germany, apart from the actual scope of damage it has inflicted on the enemy, is to be content with the conquest already made. If such is Germany's disposition, its attention will of necessity turn to the field of economic construction. It is also plain that if Germany achieves a reasonable measure of success in this field, it would be quite able to hold a newly consolidated position in the east even if the winter enables Soviet Russia to reform its battered ranks to some extent.

If the German policy is to be laid along such lines, it is not after all strange that German statesmen would incline to a peace drive on Britain. And that if Germany sees an opportunity of peace making, it is hardly likely to let it slip is easy to understand. But what is the definition of "Middle" or of "Western Europe" as mentioned in Ambassador Papen's statement? He fails to reveal what part of Europe is to be offered for Britain's free hand. His statement, as a matter of fact, when considered in the light of objective reality, appears dubious in more points than one. For even in the event of Germany succeeding in setting up its own economic and political structure over the eastern portion of the continent, it is not likely that Britain would be accorded freedom of action in France or the Low Countries. A British regime in any of these countries would certainly be more than a fly in the German ointment. It would be tantamount to British intervention in continental affairs. Germany could never tolerate such a state of affairs unless it abandoned its scheme of a new European order.

It may be true that Germany, as reported, really sees an early termination of hostilities in Soviet Russia as the consequence of the blows dealt to the main Soviet forces. But far different is the outlook taken by the democracies. That British statesmen believe that a prolonged contest between Germany and Soviet Russia would be for British but against German interest has been broadcast more than once. They believe that Soviet Russia during the winter may be so aided as to get back on its feet. And that no effort will be spared to that end is equally plain.

What Britain and America have promised or intend to do for Russia may not be translated into concrete terms beyond a certain point. Apart from the extent to which they will actually go in aiding Soviet Russia, their disposition and attitude of mind are unmistakably set on the defeat of Germany. That they are open at all to any talk of peace when their national temper is so clearly against peace is doubtful.

What makes Colonel von Papen's idea even more doubtful is his reference to Turkey as the possible peace mediator. The position Turkey today takes regarding European affairs hardly fits it for the role of peace mediator. Of this Germany must be well aware if any country is. Ambassador Papen's statement may be only a ballon d'essai. For even granting that Germany is seeking an opportunity for launching a strong peace drive on Britain, its choice of Turkey as mediator and its promise of a free hand to Britain in "Western Europe" give to his statement turns peculiarly suspicious of purpose and incongruous with reality.

Soviets' Ability in Battle

Fundamentals, as the reports from the Soviets show, have not changed materially in the Soviet fighting man as I knew him when I lived with the Soviet army in the last war. "The peasants and the army," wrote Prince Menshikov, "are like soul and body; without the one you cannot have the other," and that explains why Stalin hastened to conciliate the peasantry.

Virtually all Soviet commanders have spoken with a peculiar warmth of their men. "My incomparable troops," wrote Rumyantsev to Catherine the Great. Saztykov speaks of "the prowess of his indomitable army," and well he might, for when the generals proved nothing but muddlers it was his men who broke up the army of Frederick the Great at Kunersdorf.

On read Ludendorff on the last war: "They frequently made fierce counter-attacks, and again and again took advantage of the many marshy areas to rally and offer prolonged resistance," "fighting all the way," "fighting long and severe."

Even the old traditional land tenure gave to all the peasantry a strong instinct of community, and that is far stronger and more developed now. In the army it produced an immense sociableness and a broad jollity but, above all, a universal spirit of self-sacrifice.

Airmen in the last war, having no machine-gun, would go for a direct crash and would come down together; there were no parachutes then. So now Gestazo with his plane on fire makes straight for an enemy munition dump and explodes himself and all around him.

I saw a kind of resentment or indignation on the faces of Soviet soldiers as they met an actual attack, but what brought them forward to the assault themselves was not the desire to kill but the feeling that they must be where their brothers were in danger. That meant that they could advance in open order and not feel that they must have a comrade close to them. They had an almost uncanny peasant aptitude for taking advantage of the merest suggestion of cover.

With their cleverness and resource went what one could almost describe as a kind of schoolboy humor. Their tricks are their own and not thought out for them by others, and that is why they are so good at partisan warfare.

These were qualities which they showed triumphantly when they had no shells and sometimes no rifles or cartridges. Now they can at least balance the equipment of their opponents, and they are fighting for something in which they feel that they have a share.

JAPAN YESTERDAY AND TODAY

Nakajima Saburosuke

By SANTARO
Of Japan Times and Advertiser Staff

Part III

The surrender of the Yedo Castle (April 11, 1868), peacefully performed though it was, was to be paid for by plenty of blood-shedding as the subsequent events showed. The anger and resentment of pro-Shogunate zealots steadily mounted and the hearts of Yedo citizens were filled with fearful foreboding. There was every sign of growing activities on the part of the Shogitai men whose avowed object was "the defense of the Shogun's righteousness." Most typical was the intransigent attitude shown by Enomoto Buyo, the commander of the Shogun's Navy, who had carried off all the war vessels to Boshu in flagrant disregard of the understanding between Imperial and Bakufu delegates.

The authorities took a grave view of the matter and Katsu Kaishu visited Tatsyama and personally prevailed on the unwilling Enomoto to return to Shinagawa on the 17th and on the 19th to deliver four of the war vessels to the Government. It was generously agreed, thanks to the great concession of the Imperial Government, that the remainder of the war vessels, five in number, should be retained in Tokugawa's possession, to be kept under the commandment of Enomoto, till the Government should see fit to take them over at its pleasure.

Birds Flown

Thus was solved the difficult problem regarding the transfer of the Bakufu's Navy. It was only the beginning, however, of another and a more serious problem. The presence at Shinagawa, so near the center of political storm, of five war vessels under the command of so notorious a champion of the Bakufu's cause, could not but be a source of trouble. They became indeed a regular rendezvous for men of Shogitai and others in active sympathy with the Bakufu, especially after the battle of Uyeno (May 15) when many refugees sought secret hospitality at Shinagawa.

Many of the baffled pro-Bakufu agents also fled northward, fanning and spreading the flames of disaffection in Aizu, etc., and thus shifting the scenes of rebellion to the northeastern theater, and it was suspected, as it actually proved afterward, that some of the northeastern rebels were in secret communications with Enomoto, urging him to join forces in their anti-Imperialist campaign. The authorities therefore kept Shinagawa under watchful surveillance.

Suddenly on the night of August 19 Enomoto disappeared from Shinagawa. There were five war vessels, one steamship and two sailing craft, and these, manned by 3,500 men, had decamped. Enomoto had left behind an elaborate epistle, addressed to Katsu Kaishu, stating the reasons why he was leaving, and where and what for. It was part of the program he had long been revolving— of seizing Yezo and founding thereon a principality on behalf of the defunct Tokugawa Shogun. As soon as this new "State" was in working order he should request Yoshinobu to send a member of his family to take it over, etc., etc.

Enomoto's Dream

Imagine the surprise and indignation of the Government, and the consternation of the House of Tokguawa. The latter immediately wrote a formal apology to the authorities, acknowledging in words of shame and contrition—whatever their feelings at heart—their want of caution and supervision in having allowed so serious a contingency to develop. The Government lost no time in warning all its official agents in the northeast that Enomoto and his men were no better than public enemies and that their ships should be treated like those of pirates, to be seized wherever discovered.

On September 22 the Aizu Castle capitulated, followed soon after by the fall of Yonezawa, Shonai and other rebel clans, so was the Imperial pacification of the northeast well under way. Hundreds of evacuees from Aizu and other vanquished clans, awaiting Enomoto at Sendai, joined him in his brilliant scheme of "empire-building" in Yezo. Such doughty warriors as Otori Keisuke and Hijikata Saizo were among them. Thus reinforced in number and morale, Enomoto made a formidable appearance at Hakodate in early November. It was easy work to make a clean sweep of the island. The famous Goryokaku Castle with its high stone-walls and deep outer moats, the greatest stronghold in Yezo, a mile to the north of Hakodate, was "bloodlessly occupied" on November 25.

There was, of course, some show of resistance on the part of official agents in charge of the Castle, and it was only a show. Before the advance of Enomoto's puissant modern-trained army and navy, all fled like chaff before the wind. There were some foreign Consuls who threatened to cause international complications, but there were men like Nakajima and others, who understood foreign languages and knew how to deal with the barbarians.

All the strategic positions being thus made secure, Enomoto proclaimed a provisional government after the republican pattern, himself voted the President. He appointed 25 Bugyo (Ministers or Governors), assigned to various branches of the administration, military and civil. Otori Keisuke was War Minister, Sawa Torazaemon Minister of Colonization, Nakajima Saburosuke Governor of Hakodate, and so forth. On December 15 was held the grand celebration of the "Republic." From the ships at Hakodate were fired the naval salutes of 101, and the city was in gala attire with flags by day and torchlight pageants by night. It looked as if the baby Republic of Hokkaido had started upon a fair road to prosperity.

GERMANY WINS MAJOR BATTLES IN TWO YEARS

War Altered Political, Economic, Social Face of Europe

By HANSON W. BALDWIN
N.Y. Times

Two years ago on September 1, 1939 —the "Total War" began.

In retrospect the world seems to have been correct at that time in only one of its judgments—that the war would be long.

In two years of struggle the war has marched from crescendo to crescendo, from climax to climax as the Nazi legions have swept across Europe and gained a foothold in Africa. It has altered the political, economic and social face of Europe. It has taught new and revolutionary lessons of warfare; the internal combustion engine, in the air and on the ground, has altered the very meaning of mobility, introduced tactics in a new dimension.

The Third Reich of Chancellor Adolf Hitler has conquered a continent, defeated the best armies of the Western World, has won nearly all the battles yet the war goes on.

And today, as the third year of "blood and sweat and tears" starts, Germany is still engaged after more than 10 weeks of bitter battle in the Soviet Union in the greatest campaign of this or any other war, a campaign that may ultimately decide the war.

Strengths and Weaknesses

What are the prospects? What are the strengths and weaknesses of the belligerents today as compared with their status two years ago; who has grown stronger—and how? And what of tomorrow?

Two years ago Germany, single-handed, faced a coalition of enemies; today, Germany still faces a coalition, but one that in some ways is an infinitely more powerful one. Two years ago Germany's military might was much of a mystery; its strength was underestimated and the weaknesses of the Allies unrecognized; today there is a more realistic understanding of the opposing forces.

Two years ago there was talk of a "phony war;" today, there is grim, unrelenting toil and the whole services of the contesting States harnessed to the task of victory. Two years ago there was comfortable talk of static lines and fortresses; today there is Blitzkreig and bombs.

Two years ago there was little lilt of spirit of beat of drums calling forth to war; today there is little high enthusiasm or martial ardor, but stubborn determination, deep-seated and burning resentment, or resigned fatalism. Today there is unrelenting war with no end in sight.

Strategy of War

War—"Total War"—embraces far more than military effort alone. It comprises all the energies of the State and its peoples, and the grand strategy of any war—this one even more emphatically then in the past—must take cognizance of political, economic, and psychological, as well as military, factors.

The United States—with its immense raw material, financial and industrial resources; a "green" Army of some 33 divisions; a Navy almost equally divided between Atlantic and Pacific, organized around 17 battleships, more than those of any other sea power in the world; an air force in embryo, but an air craft output of 1,500 planes a month—this United States with its great latent power being translated into military strength, probably holds the key to victory, defeat or stalemate.

In two years the American attitude toward the war has altered from one of legislated neutrality to one just short of shooting belligerency. We are slowly becoming in real truth the "arsenal of democracy." By policy and the spoken word we are committed to a British victory, but the measure of our aid has so far been limited to industrial and financial help and to reconnaissance assistance given to the British in their war at sea by American informational naval patrols.

In these ways time has aided the British and their Allies. It seems probable that as more time passes and the war goes on the further extension of American aid possibly to include our participation in all-out shooting war, rather than a retraction of our present effort, is likely.

Guardian of Gateway

Turkey, of smaller strength but in a key geographical position, is another power whose attitude toward the war may profoundly alter future campaigns. Turkey is the guardian of the vital Dardanelles gateway into Asia Minor.

For the divided and unconquered France of two years ago has been substituted a divided and conquered France today. Vichy's collaboration with the Axis Powers is strictly limited, first by its capacity for such collaboration; second, by the opposition of many of its people and some of its colonies; third, by political cross-currents from other nations which influence Vichy's course.

Menocal of Cuba

Seldom can one career span a nation's origin and development as did that of General Mario Garcia Menocal in Cuba.

Warrior of the revolution for independence from Spain; President; exile; a major factor in bringing down the dictator Machado; opponent and then collaborator of Fulgencio Batista—such is his kaleidoscopic record.

As leader of the conservative forces in Cuba, General Menocal found himself out of sympathy with leftist tendencies that have swept through the island in recent years. On the other hand, he illustrates a paradox of Cuban politics in that he has been close to popular opinion, especially in his successful opposition to Machado. In that instance his rightist forces made common cause with the popular upsurge that unseated the dictator.

Characteristic again of Cuban politics was General Menocal's attitude toward Batista. As an Army officer, General Menocal shared the dislike of his class for the sergeant who had overthrown it. But as time matured the Batista regime, Menocal found ways to reconcile his differences with the youthful dictator who became President.

The passing of a single Cuban who spent more than a half century in politics graphically recalls how things have been done in the sugar island.—Christian Science Monitor.

Y.C.A.C. MEN TAKE 4 WEEKEND GAMES

Ladies' Basketball Team Bows, 15 to 14, to Girls Higher School

Yokohama Country and Athletic Club men's teams made a clean sweep of their four games over the weekend but the only ladies' squad which played, the basketball quintette, lost a close 15 to 14 decision to the Yokohama Girls Higher School. All five contests were played at the club grounds.

The ladies were the first to get into action Saturday afternoon as the intra-club hockey game had to be called off on account of the inclement weather and the wet grounds.

The Y.C. and A.C. cagers made an auspicious start, gaining an early lead over the port city girl students and held a 10 to 4 advantage at halftime. However, the visitors staged a good rally in the third quarter to reduce their deficit to a single point by the time the stanza ended.

Close Game Fought

The last quarter was a ding-dong struggle with the issue in doubt until the final whistle. The students kept up their strong offensive which netted two baskets to give them a 15 to 12 lead, but, with a minute left the home squad sank a basket to make the count 15 to 14. The club ladies fought hard to get another basket, which would have turned defeat into victory, but the students staved off the determined bid of their opponents during the remaining seconds of play.

The Y.C. and A.C. players, their positions and individual scores follow: Maria Prohaska, lf., 4; Helen Lord, c.; Vera Albeck, rf., 6; Teresita Planas, lg., 4; Shirley Bell, rg.; Rune Hardvendel, lf., and Gemma Andreis, rf.

Following the girls' game the Y.C. and A.C. men's casaba squad gained a 71 to 36 win over the Yokohama Third Middle School.

The home team cagers, although minus some of their regulars, were ahead by 32 to 11 at the interval. Although the students managed to reduce their deficit somewhat during the early stages of the second half the winners were never threatened and won going away.

Good Attack Staged

The club cagers' attack functioned well, good passing working the ball time and again to close under the opposition's basket.

The home team's members as well as their positions and the points they obtained are as follows:

E. Eymard, rf., 28; J. Boixo, c., 16; G. E. Beatty, lf., 7; J. Ward, lg., 8; J. J. Planas, rg., (captain), 12, and C. Offhause, lf.

Mr. Hirota referred both games.

On Sunday morning the Y.C. and A.C. rugby team gained its sixth victory in as many games this season by defeating the Tokyo C.D. Club, 38 to 11. As usual the home team did not have a full side, being two short.

Playing with the wind behind them, the winners attacked strongly in the first half and by halftime had scored seven tries, two of which were converted. With the opposition being unable to count before the interval the scoreboard read 25 to 0.

The Tokyo players did much better in the second half as the wind was now in their favor. They attacked vigorously and managed to garner three tries, one of which was converted. However, the home squad had an edge in this half also, gaining 13 points to the opposition's 11. Planas converted two of his team's three tries.

The Y.C. and A.C. pack played its usual fine game and gave the three-quarters many opportunity to score. The backfield also did well, some fine passing movements resulting in long runs which ended in the ball being placed behind the visitors' goal posts.

Russell and Planas got three tries apiece, while Jalenques, Harriss and Stark got one each. The other was the result of a good attack by the forwards, a scrum try.

Playing for the Y.C. and A.C. were G. L. King, J. J. Planas, M. Jalenques, M. L. Russell, M. J. K. Stark, F. R. Harriss (captain), M. Pestalozzi, A. A. Weiss, M. Weidenmann, L. A. M. Frank, G. Agajan, W. Salter and E. Salter.

The game was capably refereed by A. A. F. Shearer.

The Y.C. and A.C.'s second soccer eleven turned in its sixth victory this fall on Sunday afternoon, blanking the Yokohama Third Middle School, 5 to 0. Like the club rugger team, this squad has yet to be tied or beaten this season.

With the wind behind their backs in the first half the club players had the students on the defensive most of the time. After 15 minutes Gordes found the net from close quarters following a pass from Lowe, the right winger.

Ten minutes later Beatty centered from left wing, and the ball, with its spin and the wind found the corner of the goal. Petroff's drive soon after gave the goalie no chance and the interval found the Y.C. and A.C. ahead by 3 to 0.

The students had considerably more of the play during the second half but the strong defense kept the Sanchu forwards at bay. Petroff and Gordes both got their second goals in this stanza.

The halves made a fine showing, Stanbury, Dixon and Heseltine giving the front line many opportunities to score, a number of which were missed.

Lowe, a Shanghai player, turned in a fine game at right wing in making his debut at the Y.C. and A.C., while "Jock" Shearer also did well in his initial appearance this season.

M. Turner refereed the game impartially and well.

Playing for the winners were C. Fernandes, G. R. Fachtmann, H. Schoene, C. Heseltine, J. A. Dixon (captain), C. G. Stanbury, G. E. Beatty, A. A. F. Shearer, E. L. Gordes, S. Petroff and H. J. L. Lowe.

The Y.C. and A.C. first soccer team scored a 17 to 0 victory over the J.U. Club of Tokyo in the second association football game Sunday afternoon.

The home squad proved much too strong for the visitors, netting five times before the interval, and 12 times after. The losers fought pluckily but were no match for their much stronger opponents.

Makepeace had a field day, making eight goals, while Wendbladh got five. Planas scored three and Vorobiov got the other. Miranda turned in a fine game at left-half.

A. A. F. Shearer was the arbiter and handled his assignment in his usual capable manner.

The Y.C. and A.C. line-up follows:

F. R. Harriss; H. Fernandes, J. A. Dixon; M. B. de Miranda, H. Schoene (captain), M. L. Russell; D. Vorobiov, J. J. Planas, G. W. Makepeace, U. Wendbladh and W. H. Blamey.

Trial Opens of Honolulu Chinese Guard Who Fatally Shot U.S. Army Lieutenant

United Press

HONOLULU, November 18.—The second degree murder trial opened here yesterday in federal court for Customs Guard John K. Yeung who is charged with fatally wounding Lieutenant Martin R. Connelly September 28, as the victim was undergoing customs examination here.

Charles E. Cassidy, public prosecutor and J. V. Esposito, defense counsel, told divergent stories in their opening statements.

Mr. Cassidy said that when Mr. Yeung attempted to inspect photographs Lieutenant Connelly was bringing aboard ship, Lieutenant Connelly "shoved and pushed him," whereupon the inspector "started to search with zeal and force. Lieutenant Connelly resented it and brought his arms up, pushing Mr. Yeung back and causing his hat to fall off."

Mr. Cassidy said that Mr. Yeung stepped back, pulled his pistol and fired.

Mr. Esposito described Lieutenant Connelly as "irritable, lonesome and full of defeated hope and ambition and maybe quarrelsome . . . An underlying mental condition that made him angry when stopped by this guard."

He said that Lieutenant Connelly was allowing Mr. Yeung to inspect the package of pictures when three friends came up. One asked "are you going to let him push you around?"

"Mr. Connelly then asked to be searched but when Mr. Yeung started to Lieutenant Connelly struck him," said Mr. Esposito.

Mr. Yeung then said "you are under arrest" and drew his gun, whereupon, said Mr. Esposito, Lieutenant Connelly struck Mr. Yeung twice more and the gun went off accidentally.

ST. JOHN'S CHURCH TO BE FULLY OPENED

Bishop Manning Will Conduct Service at Unveiling on November 30

The entire length of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, Amsterdam Avenue and 112th Street, New York City, will be opened for the first time at a special service to be conducted on Sunday, November 30, by the Right Rev. William T. Manning, Protestant Episcopal Bishop of New York. Other services in celebration of the event will be held for the clergy and communicants of the diocese from November 30 to December 7, the NewYork Herald Tribune reports.

The cement partition which separated the nave of the 49-year-old structure from the high altar has been demolished, and in its place a curtain has been hung behind the temporary altar. At the November service the curtain will be removed and the full length of the cathedral—one-tenth of a mile from the great bronze doors to the high altar—will be exposed to view.

At present the cathedral seats about 3,000 persons. When it is fully opened it is expected to provide seats for at least 6,000 and standing room for many more.

Only a small part of the cathedral was completed when Bishop Manning became head of the diocese on May 11, 1921, but since that time two-thirds of the structure has been completed. The cathedral still lacks a 35-story tower and other additions called for in the original plans, but Bishop Manning said recently that these could easily be completed in 10 years if $10,000,000 could be obtained.

When the cathedral is fully opened parishioners sitting in the nave will see for the first time the high altar and the great choir. Now the altar and choir may be viewed only by passing beyond the curtains into the great crossing, which is 100 feet square. In the crossing is the permanent pulpit, made of Tennessee granite. The front of the choir is faced with a row of marble figures, likenesses of a pre-eminent man from each century from St. Paul to Abraham Lincoln.

LESNEVICH RETAINS TITLE IN LIGHT-HEAVY DIVISION

Champion Gives Boxing Lessons to Challenger Mauriello Second Time

United Press

NEW YORK, November 15.—The world light-heavyweight champion, Gus Lesnevich, Friday night retained his title when he defeated Tami Mauriello.

The husky Russian-American fighter gave the Italian-American from the Bronx another boxing lesson as he retained the championship in fifteen fast rounds.

It was the second time in three months that Lesnevich outclassed Mauriello. Although Lesnevich failed to knock the Italian-American out, he clearly outclassed him in all departments.

The contender time and again attempted to land his deadly blows, but Lesnevich proved far superior and easily covered up. He tied up his foe when it came to in-fighting and his snappy jabs kept Mauriello on the defensive in many rounds.

Lesnevich weighed 173¾ pounds, while his foe tipped the scales at 173½.

last letter he wrote on the eve of his death, addressed to his wife and family. The letter reads:

"Being an invalid of long standing I might have died young, but heaven has spared me to live till I am 49 years, but now my time has come, and I am resolved to die for my cherished cause. Let Yosohachi (his youngest one-year-old son), when he has grown to be a man, remember the deep debt of gratitude we owe to the Tokugawa House and render his services accordingly.

"Please assure my aged mother of my contrite feelings for thus pre-deceasing her before I have repaid so many years of her affectionate care for me. The short sword I am leaving is intended for Yosohachi a memento of myself."

At the time Nakajima died his wife, O-Suzu, was living somewhere in Shizuoka with her 1-year-old boy, Yosohachi and two daughters. Yosohachi had since grown to be a distinguished naval officer, the late Vice-Admiral Yosohachi Nakajima, who rendering high services at the Sino-Japanese and Russo-Japanese wars, died in 1929, 61 years old. One of Saburosuke's daughters, O-Tau by name, was subsequently married to one Mr. Taguchi, and borne three daughters. One of them is Mrs. Fusako Hori, wife of Yoshiatsu Hori, former diplomat and now member of the Domei Tsushin directorate, to whom I am indebted for "Nakajima Saburosuke, Father and Sons,"—a book recently published for private circulation from which this story has been largely taken.

His Swan Song

As for Enomoto, Otori and other rebel heroes of the Goryokaku battle, they were spared their lives through the intercessions of their friends, Kuroda and Yamada, and after a term of imprisonment in Tokyo, were placed in high positions in the Imperial Government. Enomoto was given the portfolio of Communications in the first Imperial Cabinet ever formed, that is, the first Ito Cabinet in 1885, and continued to hold important posts in the government of new Japan both as great naval officer and high administrator till he died in 1908, in his 72nd year—Viscount Admiral Enomoto, the greatest figure in the early history of Japanese Navy. Otori's name became a household term as the far-famed Minister to China at the time of the Sino-Japanese War, and had long served the country as member of the House of Peers dying in 1911, 78 years old.

Thus did survive and thrive exceedingly many of Nakajima Saburosuke's erstwhile comrades-in-arms, and if he had chosen to live with the others—but no, it is impossible to imagine anything of the sort. He was an invalid and he could not have lived even another year. It was his star, his destiny to die at the hour and in the manner he did, and he knew it better than anyone. His last tanka (for he had a talent for poetic composition) was a good mirror of his mentality at his last moment.

"Happy is the blossom after all
"That with the gale scatters this darkening night;
"For thee is not given the gentle fate
"Of those that stay till in fullness of time
"Nature calls gently to rest."

LAST GRIDIRON TILT SLATED WEDNESDAY

Waseda and Nichidai Lock Horns 2 p.m. at Korakuen—Slam-Bang Affair Expected

Waseda University and Nichidai will play at the Korakuen stadium Wednesday afternoon which will be the final game of the Kanto Intercollegiate Football League season. The kickoff is set for 2:00 p.m.

Having lost two games in a row, the Waseda eleven is looking to this engagement to break its losing streak. The Tomon team has gone without a touchdown for two successive games being blanked by Keio and Meiji, but there is hope in the Waseda camp.

Nichidai has proved vulnerable defensively, having yielded at least one touchdown in every game this season, its offense is inconsistent. While Waseda is admittedly in a scoring slump, Nichidai's weakness may bring a few Waseda scores Wednesday afternoon.

The Nichidai eleven evidently reached its peak three weeks ago when it defeated Keio, conqueror of Waseda, 21 to 13. However, in their last appearance they fell before Hosei, 6 to 0.

Having a wide weight advantage, the Waseda eleven is in a position to check the Nichidai backs in the same manner as Hosei.

Although Waseda lost many of last season's experienced backs, the team has sound offensive power and a dangerous passer in Nakamura. At the kick-off the probable Waseda backs will be Fujii at quarter, Yasuda at full and the halfbacks Fujioka and Tomishima.

Nichidai in all probability will depend on the hard running of their triple threat back Kin to carry the brunt of attack. Kin will be supported by Muramoto and Takemoto at the halfs and captain Umezawa at the signal-calling position.

The Probable Line-up

Waseda		Nichidai
Nakamura	L.E.	Ing
Tabata	L.T.	Ohkawa
Uono	L.G.	Sugihara
Kagami	C.	Furutani
Kaji	R.G.	Tsutsumi
Kageyama	R.T.	Kogai
Umeda	R.E.	Takamori
Fujii	Q.B.	Umezawa
Tomijima	L.H.	Muramoto
Fujioka	R.H.	Takemoto
Yasuda	F.B.	Kin

As an expression of gratitude to the heroes of the Imperial Forces, a Japanese music and dance program will be given at the Hibiya Public Hall, 5 p.m. today, with the participation of some of the foremost artists of this country. Highlights of the program, which is jointly sponsored by the Tokyo Nichi Nichi newspaper and the Service to the Nation Through Art League, include "Yukihime," a Kabuki dance featuring Tokushiro Hanayagi; "Kanjin-Cho," a Nagauta piece rendered by Wafu Matsunaga and others; "Tsurionna," a Tokiwazu composition performed by Misaodayu Kishizawa and others; "Shochikubai," a koto music composition played by Keisho Imai, and "Echigo-Jishi," a Nagauta dance performed by Jusuke Hanayagi with the accompaniment by Seigoro Kineya and others.

STALIN SUPPORTED EVEN WITH LOSSES

Despite Repeated Defeats, Most Of 190,000,000 People Back Red Leader

(Editor's Note: Wallace Carroll, Manager of the United Press Bureau in Moscow, has just arrived in Manila after touring Soviet Russia from end to end for two and one-half months).

By WALLACE CARROLL

United Press

MANILA, November 18.—Josef Stalin, the Man of Steel, is determined to defeat Chancellor Adolf Hitler and Russia stands solidly behind him in that determination.

The swarthy little Georgian retains firm control of the three forces which count most in the Soviet Union—the Party, the Army, and the NKVD (an internal security organization). As long as this holds true, an internal collapse in Russia seems out of the question.

Moreover, the Soviet masses, in the opinon of every foreign observer and Russian I talked to, gave the Government unquestionable support from the moment Chancellor Hitler struck.

Will Support Nation

It is obviously impossible for any observer to tell how every one of 199,000,000 people spread across one-sixth of the surface of the earth feels deep in his heart about the regime, but it can be stated with confidence that million in the Soviet Union are ready to die in order to hurl back the invaders.

The morale of the masses was undoubtedly subjected to a number of bad shocks—the loss of Smolensk in August, the destruction of the Dnieper Dam (which never was officially announced in the Soviet Union, but which became widely known), the prolonged retreat of the Red Army and the German drive on Moscow. But when I left the Soviet Union at the end of October, no rift could be detected in the rank behind the Government.

As a result of their failure to smash the Red Army, the Germans are condemned to spend the winter on the frozen plains of Russia.

German losses have been great—I have heard their casualties estimated all the way from 1,500,000 to Premier Stalin's figure of 4,500,000. Nevertheless, the morale of the troops hurled toward Moscow is undoubtedly high. Will it be as high after the Russian winter takes its toll, after below-zero weather, frostbite, disease and homesickness as well as the hostility of everyone around them have worked on the spirit of the invaders?

The fact that the Red Army continues to exist also puts a brake to any plans Hitler may have made to strike southward during the winter. With the end of hot weather, the campaigning season has opened in the Near East, but a German drive via Turkey and Syria would be unwise, if not impossible, as long as strong Russian forces can threaten the German northern flank and lines of communication.

Soviet resistance therefore gained time for General Sir Archibald Wavell, Commander-in-Chief of British troops in India, and General Sir Claude Auchinleck, Commander-in-Chief of British forces in the Middle East, to strengthen their defenses in the Near East and India.

This is a favorable side of the balance, but the Russians, who pride themselves on beng realists, would deny to the last that there are heavily unfavorable factors on the other side.

During the past five months, the heaviest poundings ever given to any army has cost the Soviets much valuable material and many trained officers and men.

Ukraine Losses Big

Soviet losses were particularly heavy in the Ukraine. Some foreign observers in Moscow believed that Marshal Semion Budenny lost one-third of his men and almost half of his war materials when he hurriedly retreated across the lower Dnieper in August and also reported that the Soviets held on to Kiev for too long a period and consequently suffered further heavy losses when the Germans took the Ukrainian capital late in September.

I met no one, however, who was willing to accept German estimates of Soviet losses, and German figure of between 7,000,000 and 8,000,000 Soviet casualties would undoubtedly be questioned by any foreign observer in the Soviet Union.

In addition to the purely military losses, the Soviets have abandoned some of their richest farmlands—at some points their withdrawal has taken them more than 500 miles behind the pre-war frontier

They have had to sacrifice airplane factories at Minsk, dams, power plants and manganese mines in the lower Dnieper, great industrial plants at Kiev and Kharkov, and shipyards in Nikolaev and Odessa.

The big tank, ordnance and munition plants in Leningrad and Moscow, as well as the mines and the truck and tractor plants in the Don Basin, lie within easy artillery or bombing range of the Germans. So do the armament plants which the New York engineer, W. A. Wood, built at Tula, 100 miles south of Moscow.

The Germans also threaten to take all of Crimea and destroy the Soviet naval control of the Black Sea. They are perilously close to Rostov, which is a more important military objective than Moscow because it is the gateway to Caucasus, Astrakhan and Baku as well as the key to the Don industrial area.

It is therefore clear that the Soviets have suffered heavily in industrial and agricultural domains as well as militarily, and further losses may be unavoidable in view of the exposed Soviet positions at Moscow, Leningrad and Rostov.

The Soviets, of course, managed to transfer much industrial equipment together with many skilled workers from the danger zones before they were occupied by the Germans. I saw trainloads of machine-tools moving eastward from Moscow in the middle of October and heard from reliable quarters that all aircraft factories in Moscow were successfully transferred eastward.

The Soviet press also claimed that the new factories established in Siberia under the second and third Five Year Plans now were producing far more than their quotas.

The Soviets have, however, made no pretence that these new plants could fully compensate for the factories which have been abandoned or for the interruption in output while the plants were being transferred from the danger zoes.

Most of the European Continent is turning out arms for Germany. The Red Army, which has been inferior in the quantity of arms at its disposal, therefore must face even greater disparity in the spring, unless the United States and Great Britain can make up for the difference between the current Soviet output and that of German-controlled Europe.

Ahead of Schedule

Anglo-American deliveries of planes, tanks and other materials in October were ahead of schedule, but they were nothing compared to the arms and munitions consumed during that month in the defense of Moscow.

It must also be emphasized that deliveries from the United States and Britain will be constantly hampered by shortage of shipping, lack of harbors which are ice-free throughout the year, limited Soviet dock and transport facilities, and restricted road and rail communications from the Persian Gulf to the Caucasus.

While thus facing continued inferiority in equipment, the Red Army almost certainly will have to bear the full brunt of the war on the European Continent for many months to come.

Despite Premier Stalin's plea for the creation of a second front in Europe, the British army will not be ready for large-scale operations on the Continent before spring, if then.

The British will probably put raiding parties of various sizes ashore in occupied countries, but the British General Staff is unlikely to risk a major operation which might result in another "glorious withdrawal" as long as the United States remains on the sidelines.

Striking the balance, it is clear that the Soviets are in a much better position than most foreign experts foresaw when the invasion started.

They still hold a strong defensive army which should still be holding a major front against Germans in the spring.

But it is doubtful that the Soviet army will be able to play an offensive role unless the United States and Britain succeed in overcoming tremendous difficulties in the way of large-scale deliveries of war materials to the Soviet Union.

In the long run, the extent of Anglo-American assistance will also exert important influence in one way or the other on the morale of the Soviet people and the Soviet Government.

After five months of the heaviest fighting in history, the Soviet giant, battered but unbowed, still is strong enough to hold the Germans through winter and face a new campaign in the spring of 1942.

The Red Army is intact. The will of the Government led by Josef Stalin remains unshaken by reverses which, Soviet leaders are convinced, will prove temporary.

And behind the Government and Army are embattled workers and peasants united in resistance against the invader.

In the past two and one-half months, I have traveled from end to end of the Soviet Union, seeing something of its defenses and defenders from the Arctic to the Caspian Sea and northern Iran.

Sailing via the Arctic with the first British fighter squadrons sent to the Russian front, I saw United States warships and United States Army and Navy planes patroling the misty seas around Iceland and the British Navy keeping open the sea-lanes to the northern gateway to Russia.

During a week on the central front I saw the well-trained Red Army which later was to check Chancellor Adolf Hitler's offensive against Moscow and was able to inspect a maze of fortifications—trenches, tank ditches and pillboxes—in dense forests and rolling prairies where the titanic battle for the capital was to be fought.

In Moscow I slept in underground shelters with workmen and their families and watched how they reacted to the German bombing raids.

I watched them, too, when German panzers broke through the western defenses on to the broad highway which led straight to the capital.

When imperiled by this threat, the diplomatic corps and some Government departments moved to Kuibishev, I traveled with them across the snow-covered steppes and saw them installed in the bustling town on the hills above the grey Volga.

Then I flew south in a Red Army plane and saw Marshal Semion Timoshenko's reinforced army fortifying mountain passes in the Caucasus and the approaches to the Baku oilfields.

From Baku I traveled by plane, rail, road and over dusty mountain desert routes in Iran and Iraq over which Anglo-American supplies landed in Persian ports have to pass to reach Russian bases.

British Are Ready

In these sun-baked lands of the Near East I also observed some preparations that the British are making to meet the German thrust at the Suez and India if Germans decide to move south.

The principal conclusions I drew were:

1. The German general staff has failed to achieve one of its objectives—the destruction of the Red Army.

2. Despite heavy losses of men and material, that army remains a strong defensive force. It is still the second best army in the world, the only army at present capable of holding a major front against the Germans, an army stronger in trained men and material than the United States will have for several years.

3. The Red air force also remains a powerful fighting unit. It has taken a heavy toll of the Luftwaffe and given the Red Army strong support, checking the offensive against Moscow.

It is true, as Premier Stalin implied, that the Soviets are out-numbered in the air and the bomber force is weak but in the MIG-3 they have produced one of the best fighters of the war.

This compact machine, with a liquid-cooled engine, is believed to be more maneuverable than the Messerschmitt 109 and the equal, in many respects, of the Spitfire, which generally is considered the best fighter of the war.

Its armament, moreover, includes a secret weapon which a foreign general described as the only new invention of the war, a weapon which he believed might provide the long-sought answer to the German panzer tactics.

I have seen many Migs in Soviet airdromes and the skies near the front. The Soviets seem to have large numbers of them and they are producing them in a steady flow.

Waseda vs Nichidai Game Is Cancelled Due to Examination

The Waseda versus Nichidai football game which was to be played today at the Korakuen stadium has been definitely cancelled, it was announced by the Kanto Intercollegiate Football League. The moving up of final examinations for all Tokyo universities necessitated the cancelation, it was said. It was also decided to enter the Waseda—Nicidai tilt as a draw in the official league record.

U.S. ARMY IS BELOW NAZI'S IN TECHNIQUE

Fails to Match Germans in Equipment and Leadership

EDITOR'S NOTE—For six weeks two veteran United Press war correspondents fresh from the battlefronts in Europe covered the United States army's biggest maneuvers. The correspondents, Leon Kay and Richard C. Hottelet, collaborated in the following dispatch in which they contrast the German and American armies as to equipment, leadership and battle technique.

By RICHARD C. HOTTELET AND LEON KAY

United Press

SHREVEPORT, Louisiana, November 17.—The United States army of 1941 fails as yet to measure up to the German army in equipment, leadership and battle technique.

That is a conclusion reached after watching the country's greatest war games for six weeks and comes despite the fact that at the outset of the maneuvers the question of army morale was considered a grave problem facing America in its new war effort.

It is of course, to be expected that the Germans with seven years start would still be far ahead in equipment and numbers of drained and experienced troops. But their lead in this respect will be rapidly cut down as the full impact of the war production program begins to be felt.

Assistant Secretary of War Robert P. Patterson said during the final week of the maneuvers that three-fourths of the army already is equipped with the new Garand rifle and the army will be completely equipped with small arms by the end of this month.

That's just a sample.

Will Improve Soon

There appears to be no doubt in the minds of the army's high command that the problem of equipment is one that is rapidly being resolved as the country's industries turn from peacetime to wartime production.

There remains the matter of performance, technical excellence and morale. The army in one year has achieved miracles in turning raw recruits into hardened campaigners and will require nowhere near the length of time to bring the American army to a state of perfection that it took Germany. Just how long no one can say.

But while this gap is being closed the morale of American troops should become better and better.

American soldiers in these maneuvers have complained openly and bitterly about everything from their superior officers to the chiggers and the weather but they have not let their complaints interfere with their job. They kept at it seriously for six weeks, running over fields, marching at night over dusty roads, arguing with umpires, getting into fistfights with the enemy. They wanted to learn—and they did.

Here, in summary form, are the most striking contrasts we noted between the American army on maneuver and the German army on the march through France, Holland, and Jugoslavia:

Leadership

Admittedly one of the biggest problems confronting the new American army is development of competent young officers. When the German army began its expansion seven years ago it built its organization around a general staff and a small, highly-trained Reichswehr that had a tradition of military excellence reaching back to the time of Napoleon and even before that to Frederick the Great. It drew its officers from a population that had never ceased respecting the officer's profession as highly as its statesmen, doctors and lawyers. The fathers and grandfathers of the young Lieutenant had been soldiers and officers before them.

The average platoon and company commander I have seen on these American maneuvers was taken from civil life as a businessmen. He was not steeped in military tradition and his main interest was his civilian occupation. His training periods have been extremely short. He never had the opportunity to live with his men and his guns in the field for any length of time.

These maneuvers have accomplished much in bringing both men and officers to the equal of the Germans but more progress has been made with the line soldiers than with their leaders. The reason for this is that it takes only about 13 weeks to harden a raw recruit and teach him the use of new weapons but it takes a year to teach an officer how to lead such a soldier.

Technique

Tossing most of the traditions of American army strategy overboard the new armed force is being trained with one end in view—to beat the German army at its own blitzkrieg warfare.

Almost nothing that has been done in the maneuvers has followed the military manual. The games have been a proving ground from start to finish for both men and material.

The present war in Europe is being used as an advance laboratory so that no time shall be wasted in trial and error testing of elementary principles. Thus parachute troops, armored corps and dive bombers have been adopted without delay or opposition. Officers frankly look up to the German army and seek to learn as much as they can from it.

But there is no blind copying. An organization for the armored division that seems to be an improvement over that of the German panzer division was tested, and showed its value under most unfavorable conditions. Where the Germans rely on close cooperation with separate units such as the speedy reconnaissance and support troops (Schnelle Truppen) and with combat engineer and anti-tank forces, the American armored division combines these in one closely-knit organization.

The army air force tested a new supply command that takes care of all housekeeping details for the combat command and enables the latter to devote its entire energy to carrying out its battle missions. The German Luftwaffe has no such distinct cleavage in the organization of supply and combat.

Provisional anti-tank units were tested that correspond almost exactly to the German panzerjaeger regiments.

Equipment

There is a shortage of almost everything, small arms, howitzers, tanks, airplanes. Many a soldier used a dummy weapon for much of the maneuvers but there were enough of the new type guns to give all the men a chance to learn how to use them by taking turns.

It is our opinion that when fully equipped the American army will be at least a match for the Germans in arms and weapons of war.

We did note that the self-propelled weapons in use here seemed inferior to the German columns returning from Greece en route to the Russian frontier. For instance there were no self-propelled anti-aircraft guns although there were some mounted on trailers which could go into action in less than one minute.

Contrasting with the German practice of towing their guns with muzzles pointing forward all the field pieces here point toward the rear and must be swung around before they can be brought into action. Although this may seem a minor point it has been demonstrated that the German method means many precious minutes saved.

Tanks in action here were not the newest models but their silhouette was much higher than either the Italian or German tanks and the target they offered to anti-tank guns was correspondingly much larger. The American army also still is using rubber-covered treads which the Germans abandoned for all-steel after a field tryout in Spain.

On the Ebro Front in Spain I (Kay) have seen these rubber treads set on fire and otherwise disintegrated by suicide squads smashing bottles of chemicals against them.

N.Y. HOME BUILDING INCREASES STEADILY

4,000 Dwellings, With Mortgage Value of $19,000,000, Nearing Completion

To help meet the steadily increasing demand for moderate-priced housing in the industrial areas near to New York City, 4,000 homes with a mortgage value of $19,000,000, are nearing completion in Queens, Nassau and Suffolk counties. Plans for more than 700 additional units, all to be constructed under the defense provisions of the national housing act, have been filed with the Federal Housing Administration, Thomas G. Grace, state director, said, according to a story in the New York Herald Tribune of October 5, which continues:

With the exception of a single project in the Long Island City area, an Army operation at Hempstead, and a low-cost development in Jamaica, Mr. Grace said activities in defense housing had been entirely directed and sponsored by private capital. He added that indications were that local builders and local banks would be able to meet any demand that asserted itself from now on. Throughout the entire island, Mr. Grace added, there is a strong sentiment against temporary construction of any kind in established communities.

75 Per Cent Under $6,000

He said that of the 4,000 houses nearing completion, approximately 75 per cent would sell under $6,000 and 2,000 units would be ready for occupancy within the next six weeks. The rest will be finished by January 1 at the latest. These operations are in the main being conducted under Title VI, which was added to the national housing act to facilitate defense construction. Meanwhile, however, extensive operations are being carried on in defense areas under the normal peace time regulations. Within a five-mile radius of the Bethpage-Farmingdale airplane center, 200 new houses so constructed will be ready for occupancy within the next few weeks.

Mr. Grace said that up to now the Long Island industrial plants had not felt any serious housing pinch because of their policy of hiring local labor. This situation, however, is changing as the demands of the factories increase and new housing is necessary. The responsibility for meeting the demand is divided between those who are rehabilitating existing construction to provide additional living units and those who are building new houses. Up to the present, he said, the latter have been most active, although it is conceded that new construction alone cannot possibly keep abreast of the demand.

Mr. Grace announced two new Title VI projects, one on the old Bethlehem Steel tract at Farmingdale and the other at Meadowbrook Village, East Hempstead. These operations will account for about 200 houses at the outset but can be expanded to twice that number if necessary. The houses will all be in the price ranges under $4,000 and are precisely what is most needed at the present time. A third subdivision mentioned by Mr. Grace soon will be under way in the Greenport area, the first large operation undertaken there since the eastern portion of Suffolk County was named as a defense area.

Private Capital Responding

"Throughout the entire state," said Mr. Grace, "private capital is rallying to the call for housing in defense areas. In the Buffalo district we have issued 327 commitments for $1,250,000; in the Albany district 65 commitments for $260,000 with as many more applications on file and now in process. In the New York City area our housing needs are being met almost 100 per cent by private enterprise and for this we have to thank our progressive builders and financial institutions like the Bowery Savings Bank, the South Shore Trust Company, the West Hempstead National Bank, the Washington Irving Trust Company, the Franklin Square National Bank and many other financial bodies.

"The outlook at the present time is that we can meet every demand for housing that may arise on Long Island without overbuilding and without putting up a single structure that will be a drug on the market after the emergency passes."

AMERICAN INVESTOR WORRIED ON TAXES

Already Sees and Feels Them, Claude Benner, Insurance Executive Points Out

Whether or not the prospective American home owner is worried about the possibilities of Hitler and his legions bombing and invading this country, Dr. Claude L. Benner, vice-president, Continental American Life Insurance Company, Wilmington, Del., and well-known economist, is sure the investor is worried about the many forms of taxes which he already sees and feels, says a report in the New York Herald Tribune of October 5, which continues:

"In considering the question of what effect the increase in taxes is going to have upon the proper ratio of income to the value of an owner's home, it will be of help to get some idea as to what the experience of the past has shown in regard to this proper ratio," Dr. Benner said.

"The F. H. A. has taken as one of its rules in this connection that the fee simple value of the property should not exceed three times the borrower's annual income. I believe it has not made any distinction in this connection between a house having a value of $5,000 and one having a value of $12,000 and upward. In my opinion, this is a mistake.

"While the proper ratio of the value of residence to income may be three times when the income is below $4,000, certainly from $4,000 upward such a ratio is too high, the reason being that the standard of living has a tendency to increase faster when the income exceeds this figure. The reason why it takes a proportionately larger income to buy an expensive house than it does to buy an inexpensive one is to be found in the fact that the general standard of living increases faster than does the value of the house.

Sees Peril to Lenders

"I have no doubt that many of us have been making $10,000 loans on $15,000 houses, to individuals having $5,000 annual incomes. Such loans may cause us trouble in the future.

"In the well-known family budget arranged by Roger W. Babson, he allows $840 a year for rent and 65 per cent of income for living expenses for a man with a $5,000 yearly income and he only allows an individual with this income to save $300 a year in addition to his life insurance. The increase in Federal income tax alone for a married man with no dependents and this income is $265, leaving him, out of the Babson budget, a saving of only $35. Now, if in addition to this increase in taxes, the cost of living increases by 20 per cent—which it is altogether likely to do—it has already risen 7½ per cent since the war started, the man with the $5,000 income and $15,000 house, carrying a $1,000 mortgage, is certainly going to be in straitened circumstances.

"Moreover, and this is fact which should not be forgotten, the men with the incomes in the $5,000 class, and upward, are going to be the ones who are not to have their salaries and incomes increased during this war. To the extent that such income is derived from investments, it is likely to be decreased through low interest rates on bonds and restriction of dividends on stocks. Our experience has been that the salaries of the white-collared class lag during the period of rising prices.

In short, the outlook for an increase in income for people in this group to counteract a rising price level and increases taxes is not particularly bright.

Says Ratio Must be Readjusted

"Is it not apparent, therefore, that the ratio of income to the value of an owner's home should be higher than it has been in the past? Just how much higher, I do not know. But, in this connection, it might be wise to follow the practice of the engineering profession: Make the best calculation that you can, as to the increase, and then double it for a margin of safety.

"While for the next year or two there may be a good market for homes ranging from $12,000 to $20,000, because the building of such homes is going to be practically stopped on account of priorities. The long-term outlook for the expensive home is distinctly poor. If I read the signs of the times aright, the social forces that have been operating during the last eight years and the pace at which the war is now accelerating are making for equalization of incomes. And the leveling process is more downward from on top than it is upward from the bottom.

When wages rise much more rapidly than do salaries and dividends, obviously, incomes tend to be equalized. It seems to me, therefore, that it should be crystal clear that in a short time there is going to be an excess supply of expensive homes. In fact, there has been such a condition existing during the last few years.

"It is interesting to note," continued Dr. Benner, "that when residential building picked up in the early '30s, the first houses built had a tendency to be in homes valued from $10,000 upward, while, during the last year I dare say that nine out of ten cost less than $10,000, and 75 per cent of them probably cost less than $7,000.

Household Expenses to Rise

"Again, as wages go up, the expenses of maintaining a large home likewise increase. It always is difficult to get good servants at reasonable wages. Shortly it will probably be difficult to get the poorest kind of help at high wages."

As an illustration, recently, I called a tinner and roofer to remove some leaves from a rain spout. The leaves were not in the down-spouts but were in the open troughs under the roof. The job took less than an hour. When I received the bill, it was itemized as follows: Mechanic, two hours at $1.85 per hour, $3.70; helper, at $0.08 per hour, two hours, $1.60. Total, $5.30. Is it not clear that with every increase in wages, it becomes more expensive to maintain a house?

"Of course, there is always going to be some demand for the $12,000 to $20,000 home. The point I want to make is that the total amount of that demand is going to be smaller in the future than it has been in the past and this means that when lenders come to make loans on such houses, they should first see that the borrowers have an adequate income to support the house, and I believe, as a margin of safety, we should keep the loans down to a smaller percentage of the total value of the inexpensive house as we do on the expensive ones. Even then, lenders probably are likely to have some trouble with them."

Freda Utley Says Total War Means Principles of Democracy to Be Killed

Transocean

NEW YORK, November 17.—Freda Utley, brilliant British economist and world-famed liberal, wrote in the New York Journal-American this morning that a "total war," without doubt, would leave in its wake the loss of those very liberties for which the United States and Great Britain are fighting.

The author of books on the Far East and on Soviet Russia, in her article entitled "Must the World Destroy Itself?", declared that it was up to the United States to decide whether the present generation would live in peace or whether it would take part in a long period of mutual destruction and endless distress.

Even if the United States actively participates in the war, it is certain that a victory of the democracies, if such is at all possible, would take many years of the severest fighting and would demand many sacrifices.

But even the greatest American help could not prevent the destruction of the foundation of Britain's traditional well-being.

It is doubtful if Germany, with the resources of Russia at its disposal, can lose the war.

A peace by negotiation, which would make Germany master of Europe, would certainly be a blow to Great Britain, after its tremendous war efforts, but it would not mean the defeat of Britain so long as the alliance with the United States lasted. But a prolongation of the war might easily spell defeat for Britain; at any rate it would mean indescribable sufferings for all, Miss Utley concluded.

What of the Rialto?

By Tsunejiro Amakata

With many engagements having been concluded the Kokumin Shin Gekijo, the home of modern-school dramatic performances, will be kept busy until the latter part of next month largely because the local auditoriums are no longer available for the presentation of any entertainment programs until the end of the year. Seven different performances have been booked, which will be heralded by a program of the Nippon Seinen Gekisakutai tomorrow and Saturday.

On November 30 and December 1, the Seido dramatic troupe will play two dramas which will make up the program. They are "Hiko Shonentachi" (Flying Boys) by Harundo Shimada, and "Namake Ari to Rinde" (Lazy Ants and Linder) by Fuyuhiko Hayashi. For 13 days from December 3, the Bungakuza will occupy the stage. Another theatrical company known as the Gikyoza will make a stand on December 16-17. An eight-day performance either by the Gekidan Todo or the Engiza players is promised starting December 18. A program of juvenile drama will close the theater's year-end activity, which will be given on December 26-28, taking advantage of Yuletide festivities.

A special event among the December theatrical offerings of Tokyo's legitimate playhouses is the showing of the Bunraku Puppet Theater of Osaka at the Shimbashi Embujo. The engagement will be for 25 days, commencing November 29, when the first program among the contemplated five different performances includes "Chushingura" (The Tale of 47-Ronin), "Omi Genji Senjin Yakata" (Moritsuna's War Camp), "Seishu Gappo ga Tsuji" (Gappo's Tragedy), and "Koi Musume Mukashi Hachijo" (A Love Story). The dolls will be manipulated under the leadership of veteran players such as Eizo, Bungoro, Tamazo and Monjuro.

The Shinsei Shimpa, a group of popular actors and actresses headed by Shotaro Hanayagi, which concluded a brilliant performance at the Shimbashi Embujo recently, will be transferred to the Meijiza to give a 25-day run from December 1. The program has three plays, including two revivals. The curtain raiser is "Yama Sando" (The Mountain Approach to a Tombyard) by Yutaka Mafune. It is one of the so-called national plays authorized by the Board of Information and marked by a triumphant success in its premiere production at the Shimbashi Embujo this month. The drama was selected to be staged again in view of its healthy and interesting subject which will be good enough to encourage the people at home front. Second, entitled "Koyubi" (Little Finger), is another revival. It is a drama adapted by Matsutaro Kawaguchi from the short story of the same name by Chiyo Tsutsumi, dealing with people behind the guns and a wounded young army officer returned from the front, who has lost his left hand. This drama aroused extraordinary admiration of playgoers two years ago when it was staged by this group of players. "Matoi Nyobo" (A Fireman's Wife) is the title of the third and concluding play. Matsutaro Kawaguchi is the producer. Beside Hanayagi, the leading performers will be Ichijiro Oya, Eijiro Yanagi, Masao Murata, Kan Ishii and Eiichi Seto.

Sunday will be the first day of the December performance of the Kabukiza where Kikugoro Onoye will take five important roles. The principal co-players include Tomoyemon Otani, Omezo Ichikawa, Mitsugoro Bando and Kikunosuke Onoye. The program consists of five plays, of which "Onshu Ijo" (Beyond Obligation and Revenge), a three-act drama by Kanjiro Suga is the highlight. This is the drama which won the first prize in a contest sponsored by a Kabuki drama investigation committee recently. The other offerings are "Yoshitsune Sembonzakura" (Filial Fox and A Warrior), "Hane no Kamuro" (Shuttlecock and a Little Girl), "Ukare Bozu" (Gay Priest), and "Michiyuki Ukine no Kamome" (the Elopement of Osome and Hisamatsu).

Kikugoro also will be responsible for the fourth performance to be given by the Kabukikai, a company of junior Kabuki players, who will appear on the stage of the Kabukiza during the daytime before the curtain rises for the evening show. Kikugoro will head the cast in "Shinpan Uta Saimon" (Osome's Sacrifice), one of four dramas on the program. The actor will direct the three other plays, namely, "Hiragana Seisuiki" (Ups and Downs of the Taira Clan), "Toge no Ishibotoke" (A Stone Buddha on the Mountain Pass), and "Omori Hikoshichi" (Hikoshichi's Valor). The important roles in these plays will be taken by Somegoro, Kikunosuke, Shikan, Kuroyemon, Matagoro, Ebizo and Taganojo.

After a lapse of eight months the Shochiku Kateigeki, a group of popular comedians in Osaka, will set forth at the Tokyo Gekijo starting December 1, taking advantage of the absence of the leading Kabuki actors, many of whom will play at the Minamiza, Kyoto, in the traditional performance, "Kaomise Kogyo." Judo and Tengai are the top-entertainers. The bill includes "Obah-san" (Grandmother), "Seishun Onsen" (At a Hot Spring), "Mura no Isha" (Doctor at a Village), and "Gangu no Kikanju" (Toy Machine Gun).

At the Hibiya Public Hall at 12 noon today, a special program of vaudeville performances will be given to entertain the wounded soldiers and families of the dead at the front under the auspices of the Takinogawa-ku Jugo Hokokai.

The Shinkokugeki theatrical troupe will take over the Takarazuka Gekijo near Hibiya Park, starting December 3 with matinee on Sundays until December 25. The first play is a new joint work by Shinkichi Ogawa and Takeo Kanzaki entitled "Sekishu ni Ikiru" (One Armed Soldier), which has been selected as one of the national plays approved by the Board of Information. Shogo Shimada will be the hero in the play. This is followed by "Benkei" (Benkei, a Great Warrior), a two-act drama by Shin Hasegawa. "Shanhai" (Shanghai), a three-act melodrama, will conclude the program. It is a revised stage play by Gan Akutsu from the story of the same title by Okichi Mito. The first first and third plays will make up the matinee program on Sundays.

The Yurakuza will open December 1 when an all-star cast of the Geijutsuza dramatic company headed by Yaeko Mizutani will present a program of three plays, all new to Tokyo. They are "Ryobo" (Matron), "Nogiku no Heishi" (Wild Camomile and Soldiers), and "Shirasagi" (A Snowy Heron). Miyako Nara and Yataro Kurokawa will be the guest players.

The Moulin Rouge players are planning to stage "Garan" (Temple), a drama by Hiroshi Kano, which was produced recently to be included in the mass drama contest. It is most likely that the drama will feature the program to be given from December 1 at the Sinjukuza.

The third performance of Hisashige Samumida, dancer, will be presented at the Gunjin Kaikan at 7 p.m. Sunday, November 30. The program consists of ten dances, of which the feature is "Hangari no Genso" (Hungarian Fantasy).

To raise the fund for the Terajima Kobokan Settlement, a special program of dances and music will be given at the Tokyo Gekijo at 6:30 p.m. today. The leading players are Seiko Takata, Sumi Hanayagi, Midori Nishizaki, Yusaku Azuma and Tsugundo Maki.

A company of stage players headed by Omenosuke Ichikawa, Naoye Fushimi and Kikuko Hanaoka, who have been playing at the leading cities in Kyushu since the middle of this month, will complete their extended circuit performance on December 1 when they will play in Kurume. They are expected to return to the Kansai before the end of the year to prepare the January performance, scheduled in Osaka.

The Koen Gekijo, Asakusa Park, will change the program from Saturday. The new bill includes "Hoshizukiyo Rokugogawara" (A Bright Starry Night at Rokugo River-Beach), "Tekkotsu Osho" (Robust Priest), and "Soroban" (An Abacus). Noboru Umezawa and his own dramatic troupe will play.

Sai Shoki, noted dancer, who will play at the local Takarazuka Gekijo on November 28-30 with matinee on the last day, has decided to add another matinee on the second day. This is her second public performance in the capital since her return from America and Europe last fall. The box office returns on the opening day will be donated to the relief department of the Army.

A gala performance of educational, modern and Japanese dances, which passed the dance contest held by the Japan Cultural Central League, will be presented at the Hibiya Public Hall at 6 p.m. December 2. Among the outstanding offerings are "Yamato Damashii" (the Japanese Spirit), "Kodomo no Honen Matsuri" (Children's Harvest Festival), "Kadode" (Departure), "Chijinyu" (Wisdo, Benevolence and Valor), and "Kusunoki Masashige" (Masashige, Great General and Loyalist).

Opening today at the Shochikuza, Asakusa Park, is the new bill, consisting of three plays. The main attraction is "Ishin no Suteishi" (A Prepartory Move in the Restoration). Michiko Oye, popular actress of samurai drama, will be the principal player.

"Gekka no Yume" (Dream Under the Moon) is the title of a ballet, newly produced by the Shochiku Revue Troupe, which will feature the December program at the Kokusai Gekijo, Asakusa Park.

BULGARS' RELATIONS WITH TURKEY TOLD

Significance of Return of Thrace and Macedonia Described in Talk

Transocean

BERLIN, November 19.—Bulgaria's relations to Turkey and Rumania were defined in an interview which Bulgarian Premier Dr. Filoff granted to the special correspondent of the Bulgarian news agency Vox Gentinum, Konrad Joachim Schaub, as follows:

"This question which presently appears very difficult is very easy for us to answer. Like Rumania, we are also a member of the Tripartite Pact and the common activities and scope of this pact necessarily lead to good neighborly relations, which particularly in recent times led back to the traditional friendships of the past.

"Just as Germany is tied to Turkey by a friendship agreement so also our relations to this country have developed most favorably during last year in the spirit of our friendship pact and we can state most frankly that no tension of any kind exists between our countries, but that on the contrary, our relations are again resting on mutual confidence.

"I am happy to be able to tell you that in these times of great political happenings our relations also to our other neighbors continue to be undisturbed and that they are partly even very cordial."

When asked by the correspondent "Of what significance was the return of Thrace and Macedonia to Bulgaria's national strength and economy!" the Premier replied:

"Macedonia and the Aegean district as well as Northern Dobrudja were always inseparable parts of the whole Bulgarian Fatherland.

"The return of these territories, which were once taken away from Bulgaria and for which we made heavy sacrifices in three wars, we owe to the victory of new European justice.

"The Bulgarian people will therefore, in unshakeable loyalty adhere to the Tripartite Pact for all time since the leadership of these Powers accorded us this justice.

"The recovery of Macedonia, Thrace and Northern Debrudja means not only fulfilment of our ideals but simultaneously this has strengthened our national economic power considerably. This in turn will be beneficial to all Europe.

"The variety and manifoldness of the products of these districts supplement and complete in a most fortunate manner the assortment of the products of other parts of Bulgaria and thus represent a visible contribution to our general economic strength."

OIL PIPE-LINE RUNNING THROUGH MEXICO WISHED

Would Extend From Tampico on Gulf Coast to Manzanillo On Pacific

Transocean

MEXICO CITY, November 17.—Construction of a trans-Mexican oil pipeline, which would run from Tampico, on the Gulf Coast, to Manzanillo, on the Pacific Coast, is presently under consideration, Senor Effain Buenrostro, President of the Mexico State Petroleum Monopoly, disclosed today.

The proposed pipe-line would have a length of about 1,000 kilometers.

"Oil harbors, where refineries would be built, would be established at Celaya, Guanajuato, and at Guadalajara, Jilisco, on the pipe-line," he explained.

"This pipe-line would assure the supply of oil to both the Gulf of Mexico and on the Pacific Coast."

Furthermore, Senor Buenrostro announced that 5,000 workmen, who had been engaged when the foreign owned oil concessions were expropriated in March, 1938, had been dismissed.

He also announced it to be untrue that new oil fields had been discovered in northern Chihuahua, Coahuila, and Tamaulipase, as newspapers had reported.

NOTRE DAME BEATS U.S.C. ELEVEN, 20-18

Harvard Trounces Yale in Annual Big Game—Navy Crushes Princeton

United Press

NEW YORK, November 22.—Bernie Bierman's mighty Minnesota Gophers put themselves in the record books today as one of the mightest gridiron teams in recent years with a smashing 41 to 6 victory over Wisconsin that gave them unchallenged claim to the mythical national championship and clinched the Big Nine title.

The outstanding game of the day, however, saw Notre Dame take a close 20 to 18 decision from their traditional rivals, the University of Southern California Trojans who have been forced to eat humble pie most of this season.

In the east's annual big clash, Harvard trounced Yale, 14 to 0, for their second consecutive victory over Eli. Pennsylvania trimed its old rival, Cornell, 16 to 0.

Navy took an easy 23 to 0 victory from Princeton, but the Army ran up against one of its toughest games of the year with West Virginia, finally eking but a close 7 to 6 win.

In the Big Nine, Michigan and Ohio State fought to a 20 to 20 tie, Northwestern trimmed Illinois, 27 to 0; Indiana beat Purdue, 7 to 0, and Iowa left the conference for its annual clash with Nebraska, only to lose by a 14 to 13 decision.

Rams Take Easy Game

Fordham and St. Mary's met in their annual "Big Game" of the independent clubs, and the Rams took an easy 35 to 7 decision from their west coast rivals.

On the Pacific coast, Oregon scored a surprising 19 to 16 upset win over the University of Washington Huskies in their annual tilt while the University of California at Los Angeles was snowed under by Santa Clara, 31 to 13.

Southern California had 56,000 fans on their toes for 60 minutes at South Bend, Indiana, as the Trojans threatened to lick the mighty Notre Dame Ramblers.

Bob Heywood, sophomore Trojan end, blocked Dippy Evans' quick-kick on the Irish 33-yard stripe in the opening quarter to pave the way for Southern California's first score. The Trojans took the ball and rushed it for 10 yards to get into scoring position, Bob Robertson, Trojan hurler, uncorked a pass to Heywood who took it in the end zone for the counter.

The Irish, however, came back in the second quarter with a drive from deep mid-field that took them to the shadows of the Trojan goal-posts before Evans finally smashed over from the seven-yard line.

Notre Dame took to the air in the same quarter to score their second touchdown. Anglo Bertelli, Irish back, took the ball on successive plays, passing 19 yards to Bob Dove, Irish Wingman, threw another for 10 yards to Steve Juzwik, Bertelli's running mate in the backfield, and then floated one for 16 yards to Bob Dove again. Notre Dame took the ball on Southern California's four-yard line and from that point Juzwik drifted over the line on an off-tackle smash.

65-Yard March Staged

The Trojans, however, came smashing back in the final minutes of the second period and marched 65 yards for a score. The drive was featured by three passes from Bill Musick, Trojan back, who hurled the Pigskin for successive gains of 10, 21 and 19 yards. Musick took the ball and sprinted 10 yards for the final score of the quarter, Southern California failed to convert and the Irish took a 13 to 12 lead at half-time.

Notre Dame piled up a protective lead in the third quarter when Bertelli again went on a passing rampage, tossing three times for a net gain of 54 yards and a touchdown.

Southern California bounced back into the game in the fourth quarter when Bob Robertson spearheaded a mighty push down the field that was climaxed with his own dash good for eight yards and a score. Southern California, however, was unable to muster enough power in the dying moments of the game to win.

Twenty thousand Army supporters watched the Cadets take a close 7 to 6 decision from West Virginia, an underrated but tough ball club.

The first quarter was confined to a punting duel between the two clubs with neither showing any advantage. The ball was in Army territory throughout the entire second period until Bill Martin, West Virginia back, tossed a short bullet pass for three yards which McElivee took in the end zone for West Virginia's only score. They failed to convert.

West Virgina held Army throughout the second and third period as the Cadets played bewilderingly poor ball, but Army opened up in the fourth quarter in a win-or-lose gamble. Leo Mazur, Army's crack halfback, passed 60 yards to Bob Hill, Army end, and Hill took the seemingly impossible catch in the end zone for the score. Gene Smith converted and Army saved the day.

35,000 Jam Stadium

Thirty-five thousand fans jammed the stadium at Princeton, New Jersey, to watch Navy uncork marvelous power for a 23 to 0 victory over the Tigers.

Navy took the initiative throughout the game and in the first quarter had punched the ball to Princeton's 11-yard line. Opening up at the start of the second period, Bobby Clark, Navy's star back, passed to Maxson in the end zone for the first score.

Princeton came back in the same quarter in a long drive that reached Navy's 15-yard line, but the Middies intercepted a pass to stem the offensive.

In the third quarter, Werner raced 57 yards on a deceptive off-tackle cut-back and reached the Tigers' three-yard stripe, and then crossed the goal line two plays later.

Clark took the ball in mid-field in the same period and raced 46 yards to reach Princeton's 10-yard stripe. With Princeton apparently unnerved by the play, Clark took the ball on the next down and smashed 10 yards for the score.

Navy had its third team playing in the fourth quarter, and Sliwka, a substitute lineman, garnered a safety by blocking Bob Peter's punt when the latter was attempting to kick out from his own three-yard stripe.

The game was a rough and tumble affair, with players exchanging punches at several points when bad blood flared up. One spectator raced onto the field from the stands and attempted to punch a Princeton back but was hustled off the field before any damage was done.

The big Meiji team is headed straight for the league crown for the fourth consecutive year, an unrivaled record in intercollegiate history. Coming up with bruising offense, the club from Surugadai has laid to shambles all it's opponents besides registering some sort of a record by defeating Shodai 113 to 3 last Tuesday.

Although St. Paul's has won three victories, the team is given little chance of stopping the mighty juggernaut from Surugadai.

Other major college rugby scheduled for Saturday has Nichidai pacing Hosei and Takushoku matched against Bunrika.

The present campaign will be climaxed with the Waseda versus Meiji tilt on December 7 at the Meiji Shrine stadium. Both team will enter the contest undefeated and a battle royal is expected.

FULL HOUSES GREET STAGING OF 'CARMEN'

Japanese Fans Show Appreciation for Bizet's Opus Presented by Fujiwara Company

The great popularity of Bizet's opera "Carmen" among Japanese music-and-theater fans is being demonstrated again these days as a series of four performances of the work staged at the Kabuki Theater by the Fujiwara Opera Company is drawing capacity audiences each time.

In the repertory of the Fujiwara Opera Company, which is currently giving its 14th production, "Carmen" is the favorite opera which is produced more often than any other work. And it is a fact that there is no other opera in the international repertory of which both the story and the music are more widely known and more thoroughly popularized in this country than "Carmen. From the days of first operatic experiments down in Asakusa, up to the present, Yoshie Fujiwara has been greeted countless times singing his Don Jose before enthusiastic Japanese audiences.

Yoshie Fujiwara's merits as one of the pioneers of the Western opera movement in Japan are widely known; and to a great deal it is due to his untiring efforts and sacrifices materially and otherwise, when today the point has been reached at which an opera production is no longer a matter of a sure deficit, but obviously an undertaking on a sound commercial basis. The consolidation of his casual group of singers and other collaborators into a more or less solid and permanent organization bespeaks the progress which has been achieved at the expense of much idealism, work, and money.

Annual Program Set

While in the past, the company used to present about regularly two productions a year, it is now being announced that beginning next year four annual presentations are to be given, including two of Western "grand opera," one of Western "light opera," and, significant to note one of a Japanese attempt at operatic composition.

While the progress in the popularization and organization of the operatic movement thus outlined is remarkable, not much progress on the musical and artistic side was seen in the current "Carmen" performances, as compared with earlier productions of this work. The fact that the musical direction has been laid into the hands of such an experienced European opera conductor as Professor Manfred Gurlitt is reflected in some improvement in the orchestra and some more precession in the maintenance of balance between orchestra and stage. But it could not be said that all expectations have been fulfilled as yet.

Altogether, the scenic direction, of which Keizo Horiuchi has been in charge, shows the same old weaknesses which were remarked frequently on previous occasions. The acting of the soloists, and more especially of the chorus, is stiff and unnatural and reveals the lack of a truly experienced and authoritative producer. Ryotaro Mitsubayashi's designs of sceneries and costumes have shown steady improvement in style and are now equal to Western standards, and the impractical structures which used to hamper the free movements of the players in the first act have given way to a more suitable scenery.

The cast of the leading roles has provided for two to three singers alternating in each of the leading roles in the course of the four performances given this time. The only exception is the role of Don Jose, which is being sung four times in succession by Yoshie Fujiwara, who is still the star of the company bearing his name. The reviewer heard the second performance, Wednesday night, and stated signs of fatigue in Mr. Fujiwara's voice. Obviously, it would have been advantageous if also for this role, a double cast had been provided.

Title Role Inadequate

Carmen, the title role, was taken by Madam Yoshiko Sato, in Wednesday's performance. She was heard in the same part, also co-starred with Yoshie Fujiwara, in a Carmen production given about 7 years ago at the Gunjin Kaikan. Already at that time she was found entirely unsuitable for this role; and it could not be said that she has gained much in competence. Her conception of the part is far more vulgar than is usual, and certainly far more than is necessary, and makes it difficult to understand why Don Jose had to sacrifice his career, his honor, and in the end his life, all for her sake. Also vocally, she was everything but enjoyable, and we wonder who told her that the only thing necessary in order to look Spanish is to put her arms akimbo during the whole evening. She had a few good dramatic moments in the third and fourth acts.

Miss Yoshiko Nakamura, whose impersonation of Micaela a few years ago was histrionically and musically the best yet heard in this country, was unfortunately unable to appear on Wednesday owing to a sudden illness. Miss Sumiko Isamura, who had sung the part the night before, stepped in for Miss Nakamura, but was unable to impress with her performance. Inspite of a nice, if small, voice, her singing was often badly off pitch, and her acting was amateurish.

Escamillo was sung by Takeshi Tometa, a singer with a good baritone voice and a sympathetically natural way of acting but he lacked that brilliance and splendor which his part required.

In the smaller parts, Miss Chieko Komori as Mercedes, Goro Murao as Zuniga, and Hidekichi Hibino as Dancairo gave very praiseworthy performances. Also Miss Mieko Suzuki as Frasquita, Jiro Okazaki as Remendado, and Soichiro Namioka as Morales were satisfactory.

For some unexplained reason, Don Jose's Flower Song in Act II was sung in Italian, and Carmen's Habanera in Act I was sung in French, whereas the rest of the opera was given in a Japanese version. And it was in the Habanera that the singing of the Vocal Four Chorus was terribly wrong.

The ballet numbers Acts II and IV, executed by the Masuda Ballet, much enlivened the performance, which was received with enthusiasm by the large audience present.

SEVEN GAMES FIXED OVER THIS WEEKEND

Full Program Ahead at Yokohama Sports Club Saturday, Sunday

Seven games in five sports will comprise the full weekend program at the Yokohama Country and Athletic Club which gets under way this afternoon.

Soccer, rugby, hockey, basketball and American football contests are scheduled, and if the weather improves sufficiently there will also be a number of tennis matches played off in the club's autumn tournament.

Another attraction at the Y.C. and A.C. this weekend will be the dinner dance which is to start at seven this evening.

First to take the club field this afternoon will be the Y.C. and A.C.'s second soccer eleven which is scheduled to meet the Yokohama Third Middle School Old Boys at 2 p.m. The seconds have won all six games they have played this season and have a good chance to make it seven in a row today.

To Play H.Y.C. Club

Association football enthusiasts are looking forward with keen interest to the return match between the Y.C. and A.C. first soccer team and the Tokyo H.Y.C. club scheduled for 3 p.m. today.

The first tilt between these two elevens a fortnight ago was the finest exhibition of soccer seen at the port city club this fall. With the premier contest having ended in a three-all draw, both squads will no doubt go all out for a victory and some fine football should be the result.

The Y.C. and A.C. firsts are going great guns, having won last week by 17 to 0, but with this weekend's opposition including a number of former collegiate stars the Tokyo squad will in all probability prove to be of about the same high caliber as the Yokohama contingent.

With tonight's informal dinner dance expected to draw another large turnout, those intending to attend are being requested to make their reservations with either the club manager or secretary as soon as possible. "Bucky" Shirakata's popular orchestra has again been chosen to play for the votaries of Terpsichore, and the first bars of the initial number will be heard at 7 p.m.

Intra-Club Hockey

An intra-club hockey match will be played from 10:30 a.m. Sunday. Prior to the game the club ladies will have a hockey practice, scheduled to get under way at 10 a.m.

At 1:30 p.m. the Y.C. and A.C. American football team will meet the Nippon University gridders who will journey down from Tokyo for the game. The club eleven lost a close 17 to 16 decision to the strong Tokyo Old Boys squad in its only appearance to date, while the Nichidai squad has shown considerable power to tie for third place in the intercollegiate league. A hard fought contest is expected at the Y.C. and A.C. grounds on Sunday.

After the gridiron clash is concluded the club's unbeaten and untied rugby squad will be out seeking its seventh victory this fall. The fifteen will be opposed by the Yasuda Club, and the kickoff is set for 3 p.m. In the six games played to date the port city squad has scored 230 points and has had only 25 made against it. In all the tilts the Y.C. and A.C. has never turned out a full side.

Two basketball games will conclude the weekend program. First to use the club court will be the ladies' team which will play a return game with the Shirakiku squad. The clubbers lost a close decision in the last contest and hope to turn the tables on their fast and experienced opponents on Sunday. The starting time will be 4 p.m.

After the ladies' game the Y.C. and A.C. men's squad will oppose the Yokohama Technical College quintet. The home team has been considerably strengthened this season with the addition of several former St. Joseph's College players, and has won both its games this fall. With the young but experienced basketeers giving the veterans fine support, the club basketeers should go far this season.

Line-ups for the various games will probably be a follows:

Drive to Moscow Continues

Inch by inch, but with relentless fury, the cohorts of Chancellor Hitler move onward toward the Red capital. Heavy snowfall and bitter cold, as well as the grim resistance of the Soviets, are providing plenty of obstacles to military maneuvers, but the days of Moscow seem numbered as fresh news of gains by the Nazi army pour in daily.

ECCLES DENOUNCES WAR PROFITEERING

U.S. Federal Reserve Head Declares It Is an Enemy to National Morale

Defense profiteering is an enemy to national morale in the national emergency, said Marriner S. Eccles, head of the United States Federal Reserve System, broadening his statement covering labor and farmers, to place special emphasis on big corporations, according to a Washington, September 30, report to The Christian Science Monitor, which continues:

In continued testimony before the House Banking Committee in support of the pending price control bill, Mr. Eccles warned against defense profiteering, and urged heavy excess profits taxes to meet the situation and to head off inflation.

Mr. Eccles indicated that he would broaden the pending bill to clamp down on artificially maintained farm prices. He also said that some means, whether legislative or not, should be found to convince labor that its best interest lies in stabilizing wages instead of making local demands that have no relation to the national picture. Today at the start of his resumed testimony he paid special attention to big corporations.

Emphasis on Fairness

"If morale is to be maintained among the people as a whole it is extremely important that they be made to feel that they are being treated with complete fairness," Mr. Eccles declared.

"It does not sit very well when many corporations that are already very wealthy are reaping a further harvest out of this emergency." Corporations should set an example of sacrifice in this regard, he said.

Intimating that the present excess tax is too weak, Mr. Eccles said that more drastic antiprofiteering imposts should be enacted. Business units are the greatest direct beneficiaries of Government spending, he said. If excess profits are not taken by the Government, they will lead to demands for increased wages and start a spiral of inflation.

Many defense corporations furthermore, he said, will not distribute their profits, in order to protect shareholders from suntaxes. The excess profits tax directly imposed on corporations accordingly, he said, should be the keystone of the national tax program.

"If inflation is to be avoided, it's got to be a well-rounded program," he said, "and one devoted to national interests rather than to the selfish aims of farmers, labor, and corporations."

The Federal Reserve System is largely "impotent" in maintaining price levels, Mr. Eccles said emphatically, in answer to Committee questions. "Any person who believes that the Federal Reserve has the power to maintain a price level is 100 per cent misinformed," he declared. He acknowledged that it can create a tight money situation to the extent of forcing banks to borrow from the system and thus curtail the money supply.

What Effect?

But to a question as to what effect this has on heading off rising prices, Mr. Eccles shot out the word "None!" Other testimony indicated that he thought the Board's financial powers were inadequate to affect the emergency situation. It did little to affect the ultimate goal which Mr. Eccles previously defined as "dampening consumer buying power." The "most important overall factor of control over prices," he said, would be taxes.

Mr. Eccles said specifically that he felt the new law does not go far enough in taxing excess profits. He proposed a "75 per cent ceiling on profits over some amount—whether it should be eleven, twelve, thirteen, fourteen or fifteen thousand dollars would be a question for the consideration of Congress.

"If we put a 10 per cent ceiling as a maximum and a 5 per cent floor, then certainly you should have the 75 per cent rate apply when the income above the floor is a certain percentage and when the income above the ceiling was a certain percentage."

The Eccles proposal was only a shade less drastic than that of Mr. Morgenthau, who urged a 100 per cent tax on profits on invested capital after the first 6 per cent return.

"I think we have almost failed in our treatment of our excise taxes," Mr. Eccles said, declaring recent taxes were laid "too largely on where money could be raised most easily," rather than on their effect on national economy. He supported Leon Henderson's proposals for much more drastic taxes on commodities competing for defense materials.

"Many corporations are now earning more net," he said, "than they have for a long time—and that is after imposition of taxes."

Preparations Afoot To Cultivate Cotton In East by Germany

BERLIN, November 18.—Preparations are being made in Germany for planting cotton in the east. For this purpose the Bremen Cotton Company, Ltd., decided on far-reaching changes in its activities. This company is a joint enterprise of the German cotton trade with head offices at Bremerhaven. The company has now joined the German cotton spinning industry since it will in future primarily promote cotton planting within the ambit of the reconstruction program in the east. The company's capital is fixed at 5,600,000 marks, half of which has already been subscribed by the cotton trade and the cotton industry.

AUSTRALIA GETTING READY

Commonwealth Prepares Feverishly For War, Journalist Declares

Transocean

NEW YORK, November 18.—The Australian Government is making feverish preparations for war, Alfred Tyrnauer wrote in the New York Journal-American this morning.

Mr. Tyrnauer claimed that already 500,000 men, out of a total available man-power of 1,200,000, had already been called to the colors in Australia.

To release further men for military service, a law has been passed at Canberra which in effect provides for the compulsory recruiting of women for the auxiliary services. Under the terms of this law, no woman between the ages of 19 years and 60 years, may leave the Australian Commonwealth without a permit.

This journalist added that the famous Great Barrier Reef, which for 1,250 miles stretches across the northern coast of Australia, has been transformed into a gigantic rampart with all its approaches mined.

U.S. SHIP AGE INCREASES DESPITE BUILDING SPURT

Great Majority Average 19 Years Old—Limit for Boats 20

Transocean

NEW YORK, November 19.—Notwithstanding the tremendous shipbuilding efforts being made by the United States today, the average age of an American merchant vessel now is greater than it was one year ago, according to a report of the United States Shipping Board published in the Journal of Commerce.

This report stated that on October 1, 1941, there were 1,123 vessels of more than 2,000 tons in the United States merchant marine. Their average age was 19.7 years. On the same day last year there were 1,218 vessels of more than this tonnage flying the American flag. Their average age was 19.6 years.

Twenty years is generally considered the age limit for steamers.

The World Apart

real world in which we live, the hard facts we are up against at every turn, give them the lie and show them up as illusions.

That is not to say that science has not achieved the wonders it really has, but it is to say that there is in man another source of unhappiness besides ignorance of the laws of nature to be remedied in every increasing proportion by the findings of science. To wit, there is that in man which, unless curbed and checked and disciplined, constantly pulls him down from one level of degradation to yet a lower one, until to outward appearances there is not much left to choose between him and the brute.

Useless, worse than useless, to talk of "superman," with that dynamic, that titanic force untamed and not kept in submission. Every one of us knows that to be true in his own private life, and we all know only too well how true it is in the world at large.

Who, then, would not long for the advent of a Saviour? Who would not hail him, if he made His presence known and felt? The readers of "The World Apart" need not be told where to look for Him. But it may not be amiss to remind them of the words of Christ: "Lo, the kingdom of God is within you" (Lc. 17,21). For us, first to look for it there. "The kingdom of God" in this context is only another name for what Isaias meant, when in his anguish he burst out into the words already quoted: Drop down dew, ye heavens, from above and let the clouds rain the just. Let the earth be opened and bud forth a saviour: and let justice spring up together."

What better prayer in our sorely tried time than this outcry of a heart longing for justice and peace?

Advent, too, is a time of renewal. It is the beginning of the ecclesiastical year, and an opportunity to start again along the path that we may have forsaken or neglected. Tomorrow is the first Sunday of Advent and we can re-order our lives in the new year of endeavor.

GREGORIAN SOCIETY HOLDS 1ST CONCERT

Church Music Recital at Hibiya Under Direction of Yamamoto

An attempt to create a solid foundation for the future development not only of Western music in this country but more particularly of Japan's own new music, is seen in the activities of the Gregorian Music Research Society which presented its first of a series of church music recitals at the Hibiya Public Hall, Saturday afternoon. Beathoven's Missa in C major, Opus 86, was the chief work on the program which was directed by Naotada Yamamoto.

The significance of Gregorian music in the early stage of the development of Western music can not easily be exaggerated; and while its study along with that of the works of Palestrina, Orlando di Lasco, and other early masters of Western music is given much stress in the training of professional musicians in Western countries, lack of facilities for such studies in this country prompted a group of Japanese musicians a few years ago to create those facilities by themselves and to found the Gregorian Music Research Society. Its aim is not only to provide specialized training for composers and other professional musicians but more generally to spread the knowledge and promote the appreciation of Gregorian music among musical students cultural historians, church lovers and other people in general.

Tanaka Is Head

Stigmatizing the broad sphere of interests which govern the activities of this society is the roster of names of the people at its head. The president is Kotaro Tanaka, professor of the law department of Tokyo Imperial University and among the leading committee members are Marquis Yoshichika Tokugawa, Member of the House of Peers; Tadashi Yoshida, professor of Nippon University, and other non-musicians in addition to a group of younger composers including Naotada Yamamoto, Kunihiko Hashimoto, Haseo Sugiyama, and others.

Activities of the society include research and lecture meetings, collection and publication of documentary materials and essays, concert performances and record concerts, the sponsoring of prize competitions for the composition of new musical works based on Gregorian themes, and other activities found suitable to promote the ends and aims outlined above.

While foreign and Japanese critics of contemporary Japanese music have often pointed out that its most conspicuous deficiency is the absence of a thorough foundation based on the study of the traditions and historical development of Western music and its theory, the activities planned by this society may indeed prove useful in gradually closing this loophole.

The capacity audience attending Saturday's first concert and including many prominent local musicians and musical scholars may be taken as an indication of the general interest and response which the new enterprise is finding in wide musical circles.

Saturday's program opened with a Gregorian "Sanctus" choir sung by the large chorus of the Musashino Music School, followed by Naotada Yamamoto's Piano Concerto based on the theme of the same Sanctus. The piano solo part was played by Miss Kazuko Kusama. Another of Mr. Yamamoto's ecclesiastic compositions followed, a "Sancta Maria," for four female solo voices, four-part female chorus, and orchestra. The solo singers were Miss Shizuko Kojima, soprano; Miss Yasuko Suzuki, soprano; Miss Sadako Morita, mezzo-soprano, and Miss Junki Ri, alto.

Purpose Held Academic

The purpose for which these two works were composed determined their more or less academical, dogmatic character, and while the value found in the writing of such works in a strict scholarly style should not be underestimated, they could not be expected to be very freely inspired.

A masterwork of church music of ingenuous inspiration combined with great musical beauty was offered in the second part of the program containing Beethoven's C major Missa. Apart from the educational purpose, the performance of this opus provided spiritual edification and musical elevation even for those to whom the religious motives of a Catholic mass are of little meaning.

Under Mr. Yamamoto's direction, the Musashino Chorus of more than 440 voices and the Tokyo Symphony Orchestra gave a praiseworthy rendition. The singing of the chorus was beautiful, and the pronunciation of the Latin words very carefully articulated. A problem which is not easily solved offers itself in the question as to which of the numerous contradicting methods of Latin pronunciation co-existing in various European countries today should be followed by a Japanese chorus.

In the vocal quartet, which was composed of Miss Toshiko Toda, soprano; Miss Junki Ri, alto; Seiichi Sonoda, tenor, and Tokuitsu Takeuchi, bass, the beautiful, deep vocal color of the alto and the cultivated singing of the tenor were favorably distinguished.

Music Culture Society Formed

Inaugural ceremony of the "Japan Music Culture Society" was held at the auditorium of the Board of Information Saturday afternoon. The function was attended by about 1,000 musicians. A congratulatory message of Premier General Hideki Tojo was read by his proxy. Then, messages of Education Minister Kunihiko Hashida and Masayuki Tani, President of the Board of Information, were read. Koscak Yamada, noted composer and vice-president of the society, conducted three compositions, one of them being his own piece called "Hymn of Showa Era." The picture shows Marquis Yoshichika Tokugawa, president, delivering a speech.

POPE WILL BROADCAST SPEECH ON CHRISTMAS

To Appeal to Statesmen to Watch for Peace Opportunity in 1942

United Press

VATICAN CITY, November 24.—Reliable sources here yesterday said Pope Pius XII has decided to broadcast a Christmas speech over an international radio hookup.

These sources said the Pope would appeal to statesmen of the world to be "watchful for any opportunity to negotiate peace in 1942."

Well informed sources said the Pontiff was so gratified at reception of his broadcast speeches at Easter and Pentecost that he decided to depart from his usual Christmas custom of only speaking intimately to the College of Cardinals and the Roman clergy on Christmas Day.

Quarters connected with the Vatican said the speech would have special importance and that the Pope was expected to advocate a "peace alarm system" by which Premiers and Presidents would hold themselves in readiness to take advantage of any easing of the international situation and if possible turn such advantage into peace feelers.

D.U. Stars Suffer Anemia

United Press

DENVER, November 23.—Eleven of 25 members of the Denver University squad are suffering from anemia, it was revealed here Saturday after D.U. defeated Colorado University 27 to 0 in a Thanksgiving Day game. Dr. Broda Barnes, head of the D. U. physical education department conducted the anemia tests on the football squad members and said he discovered three who were in potentially serious condition.

Iceman in U.S. Comes Into His Own Again As Mechanical Refrigerator Gets the Ax

Reenter the ice man—asks a Washington story in The Christian Science Monitor.

The man with the tongs and brawny arms received his cue from the Office of Production Management when it ordered the mechanical refrigerator industry to cut its output by 43.2 per cent until December 31.

Mechanical refrigerators are the second "heavy industry" consumer product to be put under a drastic quota system because raw materials are essential to defense. A similar limitation order already has been issued for automobiles.

Sales of mechanical refrigerators also have been discouraged by the Government's new installment-buying rules which require a 10 per cent down payment on refrigerators and full payment wthin 18 months.

The OPM curtailment program means a decline of 45.5 per cent from output in the 12 months ended June 30, 1940. It is higher than the output in most other years since 1929.

"The estimated demand for refrigerators to replace those wearing out during the coming year," said an OPM announcement is 7:0,000 units. "Anticipated production will cover this by a wide margin and still leave a substantial number of refrigerators for new installments."

The cut is designed to reduce consumption of steel in the manufacture of refrigerators by 175,000 tons a year, to effect substantial savings in consumption of other scarce materials, to help relieve the pressure on material supplies from consumers' durable goods industries, and to release facilities for defense work.

The refrigerator industry consumes a substantial amount of aluminum, brass, chromium, copper, nickel, iron, tin, zinc, mica, neoprene, and rubber, in addition to steel.

Even before the curtailment was announced, the OPM's Labor and Contracts Distribution Division started to work on the problem of labor dislocation resulting from reduced production. A small amount of defense work already is being done in refrigerator plants and additional contracts and retaining of workers for other defense jobs are being planned.

The refrigerator program was worked out in detail for only the five-month period from August through December, 1941 "since it is problematical what conditions will be in the succeeding seven months," the OPM said.

Similar limitations relating to washing machines, ironing equipment, and other consumers' durable goods are being prepared by the OPM's Division of Civilian Supply.

He speaks of the various forms of nutrition and of the miracle of vitamins, he illustrates the relationship of the conception of poison by demonstrating the venomous nature of a cigar being able to kill two men. The test of nicotine, one of the most wonderful biological reactions, is hardly known to the public.

We mentioned already the ideal aimed by the highly talented author. Logevity, free of sickness, not the art of restoring to youth which he believes contrary to nature, means the true task of the mankind. The future aim of anthropology must become the possibility to increase the average period of life from the present standard of 50 to 75 years. This Utopian notion of today will be, as he thinks, the reality of tomorrow.

We would like to know something about the author himself who disappears entirely behind his work. We can only express our wish that this international popular book would be made accessible to all cultivated nations. The author is worthy to be honored by the title of a benefactor of the mankind. He has not only erected a lasting memorial for himself; he reminded at the same time the other nations of the cultural performances of Switzerland.

Investment Trust

A novel sort of trust business has recently been introduced in the form of "investment trust." This new financial enterprise, from the indications given so far, promises to be very popular and a number of trust companies contemplate entry into the same field. The plan itself is noteworthy because its authorization by the Government reflects its financial policy in certain respects.

The idea of investment trust is to invest the fund held in trust in stocks, shares and bonds and to distribute the returns among the original investors. In other words, those who hand over their capital to the trust company have the benefit of investment under expert direction and management. According to the plan adopted by the trust company which has initiated the business, the first amount offered for public subscription is five million yen which is divided into ten thousand units each of ¥500. The subscribers are to obtain not only interest or dividends but, in addition, shares in the profits yielded from market operations by the trust company.

In authorizing the plan, the Finance Ministry publicly put on it the stamp of its approval for the following reasons:

(1) It will develop a new fixed group of investors in corporate shares so that the volume of fluid shares will be reduced. And by stabilization of share values it will provide a sound and secure basis for share investment, with the result of encouraging such investment.

(2) By the same reason, liquid funds will be provided for industrial captivization.

(3) Increased popular investment in bonds and shares will mean increased popular savings.

(4) Small and medium capitalists will avail themselves of expert knowledge and direction for their investment.

In sum, the Finance Ministry has encouraged the plan for three main reasons: first, elimination of fluid shares; second, creation of a new source of industrial capital; and third, promotion of popular savings. The official attitude taken toward corporation shares in this case is quite in contrast with what was supposed be the official policy toward the stock market until recently. The stock and share exchange had been looked askance and even sometimes as an invidious institution surviving the laissez faire economics of the past.

When the Finance Ministry approved of the investment trust plan, it unmistakably indicated its policy of stabilizing the stock market and even encouraging popular investment in stocks and shares. Further, it indicated official approval of and interest in long term investment. The Government is interested in the stability and development of the stock markets. The importance of share investment as a source of capital is openly recognized in relation with the expanding industries of the country. And this official policy will go far toward dispelling that gloomy view which until very recently had been taken regarding the future of the security market.

However, in spite of official support and assurance, the business of investment trust is not without risk. Its margin of security is safely large when industry follows an upward trend of prosperity. But when business and industry turn downward, the decline of stocks and shares must necessarily involve losses even if they are operated by the best of expert knowledge and judgment. Against such potential situations, full precaution is naturally to be exercised.

For instance, the trust company which is the first to enter this field of financial operation has provided that of the fund held in trust not less than 10 per cent is to be invested in national bonds, and that investment in corporate shares is to be less than 80 per cent of the total. Further, investment in any individual line of share is to be less than 20 per cent of the total. It is further provided that the term of trust may be extended when the condition of security markets is found unfavorable for withdrawal of capital. Likewise, when the market conditions are found favorable and the investors are assured more profitable returns than otherwise, the term of contract may be terminated even before the originally stipulated time. Furthermore, it is provided that in the case of a resulting loss, despite all such precautions, the investors are to be indemnified by the trust company to the extent of 20 per cent of the loss.

However, the most important point is that in authorizing this new form of trust, the Government, in effect, publicly recognized the secure position of the stock and share market. This was done through its encouragement of popular investment in shares. It means that the stock and share market is no longer to be under a cloud as an institution incompatible with controlled economics. The atmosphere has been clarified on the point which financial circles have for some time regarded with grave apprehension.

Woman Editor Selected

WASHINGTON.—The army has selected a woman editor to interpret the activities of the army to wives, sweethearts and mothers.

She is Mrs. William P. Hobby, of Houston, newspaper executive, the first woman legislative parliamentarian, one-time assistant city attorney, mother of two children and wife of a former Governor of the Lone Star State.

Mrs. Hobby has written many so-called "women's stories" for the Houston Post. She managed to get them done while helping run the Cleburne National Bank, codifying State banking laws, joining in the activities of the Junior League and being president of the Texas League of Women Voters.

At her editor's desk—she was assistant editor before she became vice-president of the Houston Post, her present responsibility—and in the chair presiding over civic ventures, she has learned much about "the women's viewpoint."

Her selection to head the newly created women's division in the War Department's Bureau of Public Relations is viewed as tacit recognition by men in the masculine profession of arms that there is such a viewpoint.

As she sees her new job "it is to tell the story of the army to women along the lines they are more interested in—personalized news of their sons, husbands, brothers and sweethearts."

In other words mothers are more interested in their sons' health—and consequently want to know what Johnny gets for breakfast—than they are in army maneuvers. Wives might want to know more about another army innovation: hostesses.

Furthermore, a woman can tell other women through news stories and features what they can do to help entertain the boys in camp, she said. A woman can describe in terms women will understand the giant housekeeping problems of the rapidly expanding army.—Baltimore Sun.

New Air-Liquefying Method

A new method of liquefying air with much lower pressures than now required has been worked out by Professor P. Kapitza at the Institute of Physical Problems of the Academy of Sciences in the Soviet Union. In the older method the air was compressed under 200 atmospheres pressure, about 3,000 pounds a square inch. The heat of compression was dissipated by letting the air cool to normal temperatures, and it was then permitted to expand by escaping through a nozzle. The expansion to normal pressure produced the final cooling to the liquefaction point.

In Professor Kapitza's system the air is compressed to a pressure of 75 pounds and the final cooling is effected by making the compressed air do mechanical work. Cold air is fed back from the output to cool the compressed air to minus 158 degrees Centigrade. It is then fed into a turbine similar to the ordinary steam turbine, through which it expands, reducing its temperature to minus 180 degrees, the boiling point of liquid oxygen.

From the turbine the air flows into a condenser, where it is changed to a liquid. Between 50 and 80 kilowatts of electrical energy are used to drive the compressor. The turbine, which operates at 40,000 revolutions a minute, gives back about four kilowatt-hours of mechanical energy. Professor Kapitza's device produced 66 pounds of liquid air an hour at an energy expenditure of eight-tenths of a kilowatt-hour a pound. In its present state the device is not as efficient as the high-pressure machines, but improvements are expected to make it so.

The older method of liquefying air is similar to the process used in the household electrical refrigerator, except that in the latter a gas that liquefies at lower pressures and higher temperatures than air is used.—N. Y. Herald Tribune.

PROPAGANDA IN SOUTH AMERICA PROBLEMATICAL TO UNCLE SAM

Writer Finds U.S. Winning to Secure Popular Belief; Studies Remaining Issues With Its Neighbors

By DESMOND HOLDRIDGE

N.Y. Herald Tribune

Many factors have played a vital part in bringing about the present favorable change in Latin America's attitude toward us. An important one has certainly been skilful American propaganda. Some of the best-known American magazines are now published in Spanish; one of them has a monthly circulation of between a quarter and a half a million copies, all south of the border, which makes it by far the most widely read magazine in Latin America.

Some of Latin America's own magazines and newspapers carry popular columns on New York and Hollywood, written by correspondents who strive to give a sort of insider's view of the manner in which the best North American homes will be decorated next season and of what kind of clothing will be worn by the people in them. As a result, in most of the big cities in South America the smartest shops display on the best-looking dresses in their windows a small tag saying: "Authentic North American Model." Authentic North American models are more popular and cost more than any other kind.

Those American broadcasting stations that have had the patriotism and foresight to broadcast to Latin America in Spanish and in Portuguese are popular, principally because the newscasts are more trustworthy than those of any other nation.

Good-Will Factor

Another good-will factor has been the American tourist. I have heard travelers of the snobbish sort say that the average tourist is likely to make us enemies rather than friends. This view is almost completely baseless. American tourists have really been instrumental in making us many friends in Latin America. They have given the Latin-American woman chance to see what well-dressed north Americans are wearing and they have provided convincing eyewitness evidence of the fact that Americans are not really boors and barbarians.

Student exchanges in ever-increasing volume have been a splendid institution. Athletic teams that have competed in the United States have been unanimous in praise of both our hospitality and good sportsmanship, and American entertainers are so popular in the republics that it is no uncommon thing to meet singers and dancers of practically any nationality who call themselves Americans simply because it adds the necessary glamor.

Needless to say, these things alone have not been responsible for the change. Our money is beginning to make a difference as loans from the Export-Import Bank arrive. In many cases the funds have helped rescue some republic tottering at the brink of an economic precipice brought about by the European war, the blockade and the loss of most or its important markets.

Any loan made for road construction is apt to accomplish a good purpose. Most intelligent observers of the Latin-American scene come to the conclusion that there is very little wrong with Latin America that cannot be cured with good roads. Certain other loans will certainly be repaid, for they have been made to nations with excellent credit records and they will now tide them over a difficult period of readjustment—of transition, practically, from the status of a European colony to that of a member of the Pan-American community of nations. Still others have been made in such a fashion that industries like the Bolivian tin industry, essential to our system of defense, will be operated with greater efficiency.

Trade With Argentina

The trade missions traveling in both directions have resulted in even better understanding and the uncovering of previously unsuspected trading possibilities. It is often said, for example, that Argentina and the United States cannot trade together because they produce similar products, but this very similarity can be exploited. For example, on the docks at Bahia Blanca I saw Argentine apples and other temperate-zone fruits being exported to the United States. To be sure, we have plenty of apples. But during our winter, when our trees are bare and lifeless, Argentina's apple trees are heavy with fruit quite as good as any we produce; consequently we now import the Argentine surplus.

These are all factors in the change, but by far the most important one, I think, is the fact that we have declared where we stand in the present world cataclysm. We have said in no uncertain terms that we intend to defend the New World from any aggressor, whosoever he may be and whereseever he may show his head. This declaration of intention has come in the face of spectacular Axis victories, and the general-staff officers of practically every one of the Latin-American republics have been here to see how we intend to implement our intentions.

Picture of Cooperation

There is the ever-clearer picture of Western Hemisphere cooperation, of an energetically fostered inter-American trade, of roads constructed where today jaguars feed on wild cattle. It is felt that schools, hospitals, towns and populations will flow over the new roads to new lands, tapping resources now months away from civilized communities.

The question now is how to consolidate our gains, how to prevent victory from turning, overnight, into the bitterest kind of defeat. The first thing, of course, is that there be no hesitation in following the course which we have announced for ourselves. We have said we will defend the Western Hemisphere from any aggressor and there must never be the faintest doubt that we will—and are able to.

The present contacts with our southern neighbors must be continued and increased. Tourism between the two continents must be increased, which means increased services in ships and planes, for steamers now tend to sail with full passenger lists. A reciprocal flow from Latin-America to North America must be encouraged; this will be more difficult, for all Latin-American currencies, save the Guatemalan quetzal and the Venezuelan bolivar, have a very unfavorable exchange. Only quite wealthy people can visit us now, and even many of those must consider carefully. Before the war broke out, the Germans encouraged tourists to visit their country with a special, favorably-priced travel mark.

To Hollywood we should be able to look for most powerful aid, but to date Hollywood has not been an unmixed blessing. The picture of American life which it has held up to the world lacks a great deal of being a true one, and when Hollywood tries to be South American the results sometimes are deplorable. South America is littered with stories, grand or gay or tragic, as you choose, and Hollywood should investigate them before concocting absurdities which exasperate and annoy our neighbors.

Exchange of Books

The already common translations of American books should be increased and complemented with similar translations of good Latin-American books in North America. Our radio services to the south are excellent and should be kept so.

In the commercial field, the problem for us to deal with is our own unscrupulous exporter who makes a product so vile that he cannot market it in the United States, but who advertises and succeeds in unloading the worthless junk in Latin-American countries.

Economic Development In Riga Aided by Reich

Hamburger Fremdenblatt

Economic development in Riga, the capital of the Reich Commissariat Ostland, entered into a new phase about two months ago. When mopping-up operations had been finished and the occupation of the Ostland completed, the first task consisted in checking available raw materials, half-finished and finished products. All stocks had to be safeguarded by the Economic Administration in Riga, while it was necessary at the same time, to meet requirements of the fighting troops. Civilian consumption had to be cut down, while orders were placed with industrial enterprises to start the wheels of production rolling again. Transport difficulties had to be overcome to secure the necessary supply of fuels, such as coal, wood and peat. Production of peat in Latvia could be increased by 50,000 tons within a short time.

On September 1 the Latvian Chamber of Commerce, with the approval of the General Commissar in Riga and of the military authorities, introduced rationing for some foodstuffs as well as for textile and leather goods. With the handing out of the ration cards, a check of the whole population was made.

There were only a few industrial enterprises which came up to the standard required by the Reich, before any public orders could be placed. There is an abundance of wood, flax and animal products in the country but, because of transport difficulties, factories are not yet working at full capacity.

The economic disorder the Bolshevists had left behind constitutes an additional problem. This applies to agriculture in particular, which was thoroughly reorganized. Several thousand industrial workers could temporarily be employed in agriculture to secure the hay and grain harvest. Cultivation of seed grains, which are of excellent quality in Latvia, was given particular attention. The measures adopted for this purpose, including the establishment of a central administration of state-owned domains.

Apart from these various tasks a number of other problems had to be solved, such as the regulation of prices and wages. The Latvian budget had to be balanced, and industrial organizations had to be transformed and to be assigned new tasks.

New problems arose almost daily which within 8 weeks, however, were solved to the extent of enabling the Civil Aministration to direct further economic development. Greater problems will also be tackled which arise from the de-nationalization of industrial enterprises. A number of measures have already been prepared and adopted for reorganizing the former Latvian industry and agriculture for the common tasks of the new realm, placed under Germany's guidance.

Song for a City

Sing to me, city!
Draw from my heart
The song that waits there,
Silent and fettered and eager
For your voice.

Fling it across
These ragged rooftops—
Let it unfurl
Like some glad banner
Calling to the sky!

Let it descend
Magnificently
Into a tangle
Of forgotten streets
And never end—

Ah, city!
Why do I entreat?
There should be thanks enough
Only to walk these sidewalks
By a singing street!

Y.C.A.C. GAMES END IN 3 LOSSES, 3 WINS

Ruggers, Basketballers, and Soccerites Uphold Prestige Of Club

Yokohama Country and Athletic Club teams broke even in their six games over the weekend, winning three and losing the same number.

The victorious squads were the rugby fifteen, the basketball quintet and the second soccer eleven, while those which had to bow to outside opposition were the American footballers, the first soccer team and the ladies' cagers.

The Y.C. and A.C. second soccer eleven turned in its seventh win of the season in the initial contest of the heavy weekend schedule, beating the Yokohama Third Middle School Old Boys by 2 to 1 Saturday afternoon.

Although aided by three first stringers the unbeaten and untied seconds just managed to keep their record untarnished, the winning goal being obtained in the last five minutes of play.

Favored with a moderate wind behind their backs the club squad had the edge during the first half and led, 1 to 0, at the interval. Russell made the goal after 15 minutes, cutting in from the wing to send home a fine oblique shot.

The students equalized soon after the second half got under way and almost forged ahead on several occasions, but "Mac" Turner kept his charge intact for the remainder of the match. Both goals had some close calls. Shortly before the final whistle was blown by Captain A. G. Stevens, Russell's center from the side bounded off a defender's foot into the net to decide the issue.

Playing for the winners were M. Turner, G. R. Fachtmann, E. Eymard, C. Heseltine, J. A. Dixon (captain), H. Schoene, J. Boixo, G. E. Beatty, E. Gordes, U. Wendbladh and M. L. Russell.

First Soccer Team Loses

Handicapped by the absence of two of its stalwarts, the Y.C. and A.C. first soccer eleven lost to the strong Tokyo H.Y.C. Club in the second game Saturday afternoon, 4 to 2. It was the first defeat this fall.

The players from the capital displayed fine form and had a decided edge in the play. But for the good goaltending of "Bucky" Harriss they would have won by a bigger margin.

The visitors drew first blood after 15 minutes, a clever movement ending with the center rattling the riggings from close quarters. Soon after the Tokyo squad, which included a number of former college stars, increased their advantage to two. Shortly before halftime Agajan reduced the homesters' deficit to one when he made no mistake with a good pass from Planas near the goalmouth.

With the wind in its favor after the intermission the winners did the major part of the pressing, and made two more goals in succession to lead by 4 to 1. A few minutes before the end the Yokohama forwards staged one of its breakaways and Agajan netted on a transfer from Planas.

The Y.C. and A.C. eleven consisted of F. R. Harriss, L. A. M. Frank, G. R. Fachtmann, M. B. de Miranda, H. Schoene (captain), M. L. Russell, G. Agajan, G. E. Beatty, J. J. Planas, U. Wendbladh and W. H. Blamey.

Nichidai Gridders Win

Playing a brand of football with which the club's American football team could not cope, the Nippon University eleven gained a 27 to 6 victory on the Y.C. and A. C. field Sunday afternoon.

The students, ably coached by Tsunehiko Kasahara, former Meiji rugby luminary, made four touchdowns while their opponents hit paydirt once. Sweeping end runs aided by fine blocking and a good aerial attack played a major part in Nichidai's victory.

The visitors ran back the Y.C. and A.C. kickoff to their 42 but the ball rested on their 30-yard stripe after the next play due to a recovered fumble. They carried the ball to their 40-yard line on the next down, and on the ensuing play Kin skirted right end to race 60 yards for a touchdown. With the placement kick for the extra point just missing the uprights the count rested at 6 to 0.

Five minutes later Petroff picked up a Nichidai fumble near midfield and ran 55 yards to gain his team's only score. The plunge for the seventh point failed, deadlocking the count.

The students soon regained the lead. Two successive first downs brought the pigskin from their 18 to the center line and then Kin circled left end to scamper 50 yards for his second major score. Muramoto drove through right tackle to gain another point making the totals 13 and 6.

Pass Is Intercepted

The Y.C. and A.C. was on the defensive most of the second quarter. Furutani intercepted a club forward pass and sprinted 20 yards for the third Nichidai touchdown. The same player threw the ball to Sazaki in the end zone to get the extra counter, making the score 20 to 6.

The third quarter was fairly even, and neither side could add to their totals. As the stanza ended the homesters made two first downs to drive to the students' 30, but lost the ball on downs soon after.

As the final canto got under way Nichidai forced play to the Y.C. and A.C. half of the field. Play centered about midfield for some time but the winners gradually pushed their hard fighting opponents back. Just before the end Kin whipped a 30-yard heave to Takamori who received it behind the Y.C. and A.C. goalline. The same players repeated the same play successfully for the convert to make the final count 27 to 6.

Kin, ably assisted by his teammates, stood out for victors. Harriss played a great game for the losers, being a constant threat on the offensive and stopping many a Nichidai thrust. Agajan also turned in a fine performance, accepting some difficult passes and tackling hard.

The line-ups follow:

Nichidai: Ishii, re.; Kogai, rt.; Tsutsumi, rg.; Furutani, c.; Suzuki, lg.; Kobayashi lt.; Tomoda, le.; Omegawa, qb.; Muramoto lh.; Matsunobu, rh.; Kin, fb. Reserves: Matsushima, Okawa, Sugimoto, Takamori, Sazaki, Ozumi, Kobata, Takemoto, Nishimura, Matsuyama, Oka, Seki and Minokawa. Coach: T. Kasahara.

Y.C. and A.C.: G. Agajan, lh., le.; L. A. M. Frank, re.; S. Petroff, c.; A. A. Weiss, lg.; H. Fernandes, rt.; D. Vorobiov, rg.; S. G. Bielous, rt.; F. R. Harriss, qb.; H. Schoene, fb.; J. J. Planas, rh.; M. L. Russell, rh.; J. Boixo, lt.; E. Salter, lt., and E. Offhause.

Ruggerites Win Again

The club's unbeaten and united rugby team scored its seventh victory Sunday afternoon, gaining a 26 to 3 decision over the Yokohama Commercial College fifteen. Despite the sterling assistance of two visitors who turned out for them the clubbers were unable to field a full team as usual, being one man short.

Five minutes after the match got under way the Y.C. and A.C. forward dribbled the ball from midfield to near the collegians' line. Then Bill Salter kicked across and Agajan scooped up the ball to go over near the corner for the initial score. The try was unconverted, leaving the count at 3 to 0.

Midway through the period Agajan gained possession of the oval and on being tackled near students' 25-yard line, transferred to Bill Salter who made the remaining distance to place the ball between the uprights. Planas sent the pigskin sailing over the crossbar to make the score 8 to 0, and it rested at that when the intermission was called.

Two more converted tries early in the second half boosted the club total to 18. The first was made by Agajan, on a good relay from Harriss, and the former also made his third try of the game soon after.

The students kept fighting hard and their efforts were rewarded after 20 minutes of play in this stanza with a try resulting from a nice three-quarters movement. The placement from a difficult angle was missed, and the scoreboard read 18 to 3.

A few minutes later Weiss ploughed his way through a number of opponents to fall over the line to make the count 21 to 3. Shortly before the end Harriss finished off a good movement by the threes to get the last try of the game, which Palanas converted.

The Y.C. and A.C. line-up included J. J. Planas, M. L. Russell, F. R. Harriss (Captain), H. Schoene, R. A. P. Craigie, E. Salter, Mr. Weidenmann, A. A. Weiss, M. Pestalozzi, W. Salter (vice-captain), and G. Agajan.

Lady Cagers Lose

In a close and hard fought basketball game after the rugby game the Y.C. and A.C. ladies' quintette lost to the Shirakiku team by 23 to 17.

The home team started off well, gaining a 5 to 4 lead during the first quarter. During the second stanza the lead changed hands several times but the halfway mark found the visitors in front by 12 to 9.

Although the losers were always within striking distance they never could work off their deficit in the second half, the winners always managing to gain points when their opponents began closing the gap in the scores.

Teresita Planas played a fine game at left guard, and did well on the attack as well as the defense, making 11 points. Her teammates were Marie Eymard, lf., 2; Rune Hardvendel, lf.; Mera Albeck, rf., 2; Gemma Andrels, rf.; Helen Lord, c., 2; Mary Stevens, rg.; Juliette Darbier, rf., and Shirley Bell, rg.

Club Quintet Winner

The Y.C. and A.C. basketball team gained its third victory in its third appearance this season by defeating the Honmoku Middle School Old Boys, 46 to 40.

The club casaba players had to play a good brand of basketball to beat the Honchu O.B. squad, for most of the latter are now members of Yokohama college teams.

The winners piled up a big lead at the start, having a 14 to 4 advantage, but the margin was reduced to 28-20 by halftime.

The O.B. quintet rallied strongly after the interval and cut down the Y.C. and A.C. advantage to only a single basket four times, but on each occasion the clubbers drew away again.

The home squad's line-up, positions and individual scores follow:

J. J. Planas (captain), lf., 8; J. Boixo, rf., 2; W. H. Blamey, rf., 2; S. Petroff, lf.; M. V. Fachtmann, c., 24; F. R. Harriss, rg., 2; D. Vorobiov, lg., and E. Eymard, rg., 8.

Mito Fencers Pay Homage

A party of juvenile fencing experts from Mito, Ibaraki Prefecture, visited Tokyo Sunday morning, to demonstrate their patriotic spirit, said to be traditional from their ancestors who formed the noted Mito clan.

The visitors, led by a veteran swordsman, Takaichi Suzuki, and accompanied by 20 parents and brothers, arrived at Uyeno Station at 7:48 a.m. to streightway proceed to the Yasukuni Shrine atop Kudan Hill, every boy with his head tied by a white cloth band and a wooden sword worn on his side.

After worshipping the shrine and cleaning up the premises, the party moved to the War Ministry at Miyakezaka where the boys made a joint money donation to the national defense funds. Around noon they went to the plaza in front of the Imperial Palace. After paying homage to the Palace, the party joined in the ground readjustment work on the plaza. Then the party set out on their parade through Ginza, Nihonbashi and Kanda to Uyeno Station where they left the city by the 8:55 p.m. train for Mito.

Smith Beats Brady In British Smoker For Feather Crown

Reuters

LONDON, November 25.—The Empire bantamweight champion, Jim Brady, was decisively out-pointed by Sergeant Tom Smith in the final elimination bout last night for the British featherweight title held by Nel Tarleton. Brady won only the first round. Then Smith's superior foot-work and quickness with his left completely dominated the fight, leaving the result never in doubt, and it was somewhat suprising to see Brady, who hails from Dundee, taking lessons in quickfire left-hand punching from Sunderland's Tom Smith.

CUSTOMS UNION INITIATED FOR ARGENTINA, BRAZIL

Agreement Abolishing Duties Between 2 Countries Is First Step

Transocean

BUENOS AIRES, November 22.—The amendment to the Argentine-Brazilian Trade Agreement, which abolishes custom duties on the manufactured articles of each country entering the other, is a first step toward the establishment of an Argentina-Brazil customs union which might be joined by all the neighboring States. Argentine Foreign Minister Ruiz Guinazu declared yesterday.

He added that both Brazil and Argentina desired to establish a condition of absolutely free trade between the two countries.

Foreign Minister Guinazu explained that the amendment, in the first place, provides for preferential treatment for the products of each country in the trade of the other.

Provisionally, this preferential treatment will be accorded for a period of 10 years.

This preference will be gradually extended to other products of each country in the form of a progressive reduction in custom duties, just so long as the national economy of either Brazil or Argentina is not adversely affected.

The ease with which they can be shaped by mild heat, pressure or other treatments is a highly desirable property, and the fact that they can be made glass-clear, opaque or dyed to any color has made them still more attractive. They can be made from such raw materials as coal, oil, limestone, brine, cotton and wood. These are some of the reasons why plastics are so much in demand for airplane construction and many thousands of other uses.

SOVIETS WORK HARD TO BUILD AIRDROMES

American Correspondent Witnesses Effort of Russians to Strengthen Stand

The following is another in the series of articles by the former United Press London manager who recently toured Soviet Russia and the Middle and Near East.

By Wallace Carroll
United Press

MANILA, November 22.—The Egyptians never worked harder on the pyramids than the Russians did when building the airdrome where the first American fighters were assembled for action on the Russian front.

It looked like a hopeless job when orders came from Moscow to construct an airdrome in a region of endless forests and peat bogs. Foreign experts, in fact, said that it could not be done; but the Russians just laughed and said, "Nichevo—it's nothing!"

A few weeks later, when two young officers of the United States Army Air Corps arrived to supervise the assembling of the first Curtiss P-40s, they found a modern airdrome unlike any other in the world.

The Soviet Government assigned 2,000 laborers and 1,000 army pioneers for the job. Within three weeks they had cleared tree stumps from an area of several square miles. Then they set to work on the cleared field and started to build an all-weather runway.

First they dug away peat to a depth of two to three feet; then they laid foundation logs like railway ties. Where they had to dig deeper they laid more logs crosswise above the first layer. On top they finally put solid flooring one mile long and a hundred yards wide which not even the heaviest bomber could shake.

Lieutenant Hubert Zemke, 27, of Missoula, Montana, arrived from Britain with the first consignment of P-40s. Lieutenant John Alison, 28, of Gainesville, Florida, who had flown to Moscow with Harry Hopkins, Lend-Lease Administrator, joined Lieutenant Zemke in July.

Both had been making tests with American and British planes with the Royal Air Force in Britain. They knew the difficulties and delays which the British had experienced when assemblying and flying American planes, and they now were going to see how the Red Air Force tackled the same task.

It did not look very encouraging. Lieutenant Zemke had been plugging away at Russian on the ship and Lieutenant Alison also had been trying to learn something of that difficult language, but neither knew the technical terms they would have to employ. Soviet engineers and airmen assigned to cooperate with them knew very little English.

But the Russians soon showed that skill and aptitude for mastering difficult problems which has repeatedly amazed foreign observers in the Soviet Union since the war began.

In the railway coaches where the Americans and Russians made their quarters, the Russians set to work by candlelight studying instructions in English and French and copying designs. When they ran into difficulty, they consulted the Americans, and usually everything was straightened out by the use of a Russian and English technical dictionary, with plenty of good humored gestures on both sides.

In a surprisingly short time the Russians mastered the secrets of the P-40. The British had put several gadgets in the plane, which added several hundred pounds of weight and cut the speed by 15 miles an hour. Soviet engineers took one look and decided that the gadgets had to go.

In the United States and Britain two cranes were used to assemble P-40s, one two tons and another of one ton. The Soviets had only one crane of one ton, But they just said "Nichevo," and went ahead.

The one-ton crane was used to suspend the fuselage—a job done in the United States and Britain with a two-ton crane. Then 20 pioneers raised a wing and held it with their backs and shoulders while mechanics buckled on the fuselage. Sometimes they stood hunched over for more than half an hour while the wing was being fixed.

"Nichevo," said the Russians.

Royal Air Force mechanics were assembling Hurricanes at the same airdrome. They had been handling Hurricanes for years, whereas the Russians were seeing P-40s for the first time; but the Russians were most disappointed when the British airmen succeeded in assembling the first Hurricane before they had assembled the first Curtiss.

So they redoubled their efforts and succeeded in delivering five P-40s near the airdrome in a single day. They worked for 14 hours or more a day, and were always enthusiastic, always convinced that they were going to win the war and always good-humored.

One evening they held a "banquet" in their railroad dining car. The Russians pressed Lieutenant Alison, who was virtually a teetotaler, to give them a toast. Alison raised his glass of vodka and toasted the Soviet mechanics. A big mechanic was so deeply touched that he picked up Alison, who was a little fellow, and gave him a great Russian kiss of friendship. Lieutenant Alison did not give any more toasts.

The United States Army Air Corps had a lot of difficulty with P-40s, and the Royal Air Force also lost a number of pilots flying them. But the Soviet aviators flew them without accident. They described the P-40 as an "average plane," a verdict with which most American fliers would probably not agree.

But the Russians were not the only ones to distinguish themselves. One day Lieutenant Zemke was about to alight when he discovered that the wheels were looked. There was nothing he could do about it, so he put the plane down on the airdrome. Luckily the runaway was wet and the plane skidded along without overturning.

Lieutenant Alison had a similar experience when his controls were locked. He was too low to bail out, so he skillfully and safely maneuvered the plane onto the airdrome.

On another occasion, Lieutenant Alison dived out from some clouds and was welcomed with several hearty salvoes from a Soviet anti-aircraft battery. When he landed the Russians just laughed and said, "nichevo, the anti-aircraft guns never hit anything."

The Americans had warned Soviet mechanics not to load the machine-guns before the planes were completely assembled. One of them disregarded the warning and when the engine started, the guns fired into the propellor. American and British engineers will tell you that metal propellors which are damaged cannot be repaired. The Russians just said "nichevo" and did something mysterious to the propellor, and it is still doing duty.

This refusal to be daunted by difficulties of any kind is one of the main reasons why the Soviets are carrying on today.

Young Men Going West

The call for young men to go west is being answered by these 3,500 young boys of Tokyo who had just completed their half year's training at the Mitaka, Nanao and Oizumi Colonization Schools. They will leave soon for Manchoukuo and Inner Mongolia as colonizers. In a grand ceremony which was held at Hibiya Park, these young stalwart hearts paraded before the reviewing stand where Tokyo's Mayor Tomekichi Okubo gave them the once over. Said Akio Kobayashi, representing the young colonizers, "We are prepared to die in Manchoukuo and Inner Mongolia."

U.S.-TREASURY BANS ANILINE PURCHASE

Dye Stuff Corporation Loses Plea to Take Over Swiss Chemie Control

A new development in the affairs of the German dye trust in the United States was disclosed recently when the Treasury Department announced that it had denied an application of the General Dyestuff Corporation to acquire control of the General Aniline and Film Corporation from its present owners, Internationale Gesellschaft fuer Chemische Unternehmungen A. G., a Swiss holding company, says a Washington dispatch to the New York Herald Tribune.

The Treasury gave no reason for its action. It was recalled, however, that the Securities and Exchange Commission, in a report to Congress last June, linked the Swiss company, generally known as Swiss Chemie, with I. G. Farbenindustrie A. G., the German dye trust.

General Dyestuff, which has its offices at 435 Hudson Street, New York, appealed in its application for a Treasury license to buy 1,550,000 shares of General Aniline stock from Swiss Chemie. The Swiss firm, corporate ownership of which has never been made public, owns more than 90 per cent of the outstanding stock of General Aniline.

General Dyestuff is at present exclusive sales and distribution agent for General Aniline, which manufactures chemical, dye and film products. General Dyestuff is also the sales agency for several other American chemical and dye firms.

D. A. Schmitz, president of General Aniline, was also chairman of the board of directors of General Dyestuff until 1939, when he sold his interest in the latter firm. Ernest K. Halbach is president and now controls the majority stock of General Dyestuff.

The extent to which the German dye trust fostered "circular ownership" in the dye industry is illustrated by the fact that D. A. Schmitz is a brother of Hermann Schmitz, who until last year was president of Swiss Chemie, the parent firm of General Aniline. Hermann Schmitz, a German national, is also a director of German I. G., parent firm of the German dye trust.

When Hermann Schmitz resigned as president of Swiss Chemie he was succeeded by a Swiss citizens, Felix Iselin. Mr. Iselin is also a director of General Aniline.

General Aniline, an American corporation, with headquarters at 230 Park Avenue, New York, was organized (originally with the name of American I. G. Chemical Corporation) under the sponsorship of German I. G., which guaranteed a $30,000,000 issue of debentures. More than half of the debentures are still outstanding and are still guaranteed by German I.G.

German I.G. also sponsored Swiss Chemie, which the S.E.C. reported was commonly regarded some years ago as a German I.G. subsidiary. German I. G. also guaranteed the stock issue of Swiss Chemie, but Swiss officials contend that the latter firm has since broken all contractual relations with the German dye trust.

General Aniline controls the General Aniline Works, one of the largest producers of dyes in the United States, and is also closely linked with the Agfa-Ansco Corporation, manufacturers of film and photographic supplies.

General Aniline was indicted last January by a Federal Grand Jury for conspiring with five other firms, including the German I.G., to create a world-wide magnesium trust. The other firms were the Aluminum Company of America, Dow Chemical Corporation, American Magnesium Corporation and the Magnesium Development Corporation. All firms pleaded not guilty.

The affairs of General Aniline have been confused, the New York Herald Tribune learned, as a result of executive orders issued during the last two years by President Roosevelt freezing foreign assets in the United States.

Although Swiss Chemie claims to own beneficially a majority of the voting stock of General Aniline, a large portion of that stock is recorded in the name of nationals of the Netherlands. Under the freezing order, ownership of that stock cannot be changed, and presumably the stock also cannot be voted in stockholders' meetings. It is understood, therefore, that it is now impossible for General Aniline to muster a majority of the outstanding shares of stock. This makes it impossible for the company to obtain the quorum necessary to transact business in a stockholders' meeting.

General Dyestuff has been involved only once in the investigation of German dye trust interests in the United States. Last May 21 an order was signed in United States District Court in New York directing the seizure of all property and credits of the German I. G. held by General Dyestuff. An affidavit filed at the time showed that the firm owed $24,000 to German I. G.

Mr. Halbach said at the time that the debt was the result of purchases from the dye trust by General Dyestuff over a period of two years. He emphasized that the firm had no other transactions with German I. G. Mr. Halbach also emphasized that General Dyestuff had only American stockholders and directors. The other officers of General Dyestuff are Rudolph Lenz, vice-president, H. W. Martin, secretary, and A. . Wingender, treasurer.

US COURT UPHOLDS ALUMINUM PRACTICE

Judge Caffey Declares No Monopoly Existing in Virgin Aluminum

Despite the admitted control by the Aluminum Company of America of 100 per cent virgin aluminum in the United States, Judge Francis G. Caffey indicated in United States District Court that Alcoa had not monopolized the metal in the meaning of the Sherman anti-trust act, reports The New York Herald Tribune. He announce his ruling during the third day of delivery of his oral decision in the Government's four-year old anti-trust suit against Alcoa, in which the Department of Justice seeks the breaking up of the $250,000,000 company into smaller corporations.

Judge Caffey cited high court opinions to the effect that monopolization, as the term is used in section two of the Sherman Act, involves exclusion and prevention of competition. Alcoa made no such attempts, he ruled. He offered the following hypothetical case to prove the point in what was regarded by attorneys in the case as a crux of the entire opinion:

Referring to A and B as manufacturers of the same article in the same community, Judge Caffey said: "In the course of time A did his work better and at less cost than B. During the same period B produced inferior merchandise. The consequence was that all customers of B shifted to A and B was forced to close his manufacturing business. The competition was fair, and A had continued to manufacture his product for 50 years and has sold all of it to consumers through his own establishment or through B. The whole cause of the withdrawal of B from manufacturing was his own inefficiency or deficiency. It cannot be said that A caused the discontinuance of manufacturing by B."

Alcoa, it was noted, has been in business 50 years, by itself or through its predecessor, the Pittsburgh Reduction Company. Later in the day, Judge Caffey dropped the hypothetical case of A and B and said that the evidence failed to show Alcoa had monopolized virgin aluminum in the United States. In greater or less degree, he added, the evidence showed that aluminum manufactured by Alcoa had been actively in competition for many years with foreign virgin aluminum imported into the United States, with scrap or secondary aluminum and other metals, including steel, nickel, tin, zinc, copper and lead.

The court emphasized that in certain periods including war years, scrap aluminum is sold at higher prices than virgin aluminum. Continuing his discussion of each of 12 distinct charges of monopoly in the aluminum industry, Judge Caffey said the evidence also failed to sustain allegations that Alcoa monopolized the manufacture of cooking utensils. He cited figures to show that from 1934 to 1937, when the Government began its suit, Alcoa manufactured and sold $13,360,000 worth of utensils while $13,386,389 were sold by other companies.

Judge Caffey has now ruled that Alcoa had no monopoly of bauxite, the compound from which aluminum is obtained, of waterpower, of alumina (aluminum plus oxygen), of virgin aluminum or of castings and utensils. It would possibly be "a waste of time" to discuss the other government monopoly charges, he said recently, but he added he would take them up, anyway. He must then take up the conspiracy allegations before a final ruling becomes effective.

He also ruled that Alcoa's purchase of the Southern Aluminum Plant in North Carolina in 1914 for $6,172,247 was not done to prevent French owners of the plant from competing with Alcoa.

Close Study Made on Chi-an's Grand Tombs

most difficult of difficult things even from the point of view of present day scientific methods. Even more striking is the fact that grandeur of this sort is not limited to the "Chiang Chun" tomb alone, but a similar splendor can be ascribed to all the other innumerable tombs as well. So far as is known at present, the following historical circumstances surround the raison-d'etre of these relics:

Each reigning king of the Kao-Kouli Dynasty ordered the building of his own tomb as soon as he ascended to the throne, so that the construction work would continue up to the end of his natural life. Supposing a king's reign extended over a period of 30 years, the work on the royal tomb would be incessantly carried on throughout the same period, covering the whole drama of the man's life. It piques our imagination today to reflect how much time and money the powerful Chosenese kings lavished on executing their royal will and realizing their whims.

About 250 meters from the station is located the "Spu-shen," another great tomb. The mural paintings of its main chamber are most ornate, depicting blue dragons, white tigers, lions, and grotesque, fearful-looking beasts, as well as the sun, the moon and the stars. Real gold is used for the eyes of the lion. The bold strokes, the ornate coloration, and the general designs achieve a striking harmony, although the original color-effects have been considerably affected by exposure to the air. The compelling power of these pictures awakens a reaction in the beholder so intense that it almost amounts to awe.

Colorful Tale Told

Other conspicuous tombs are the "Tai-wan" tomb, the "Mon-T'ou-Lou" tomb, the "Wrestling" tomb, and tombs No. 12 and No. 17. All manner of inscriptions, figures and pictures are found in the mural paintings which adorn them. Such things as royal processions, dogs, lions, carts, armored knights on horse-back, battle-field and hunting scenes bespeak a colorful tale of old Chosen.

In such a brief sketch as this, there must of necessity remain thousands of things left unsaid about the kingly monuments and relics of this locale. I cannot conclude, however, without remarking on the "Dancing Tomb," which in particular caught my fancy and lingers in my memory. The mural painting of the inside chamber is a banquet scene in a noble's mansion where entertainers dressed in graceful costumes with flowing sleeves are seen dancing. It is, in fact, a splendid revelation of what Oriental dances were like in the dreamy distant days of immemorial time.

99,000 FANS WATCH NAVY SMASH ARMY

Middies Tow Cadets 14-6 in Annual Service Classic Ending Gridiron Season

United Press

PHILADELPHIA, November 29.—Swede Larsen and his powerful Navy gridiron club wrote finis to the greatest season in recent Annapolis history today when they smashed down a fighting Army eleven to take a 14 to 6 victory in the annual service struggle.

Ninety-nine thousand fans jammed Franklin Field stadium, taking advantage of the warm, sunny day to witness the classic despite the fact Navy was a two to one favorite to win as a result of past showings

Army scored first, in the second period, on a succession of brilliant plays that had Navy groggy from action but the Middies pulled out and scored three times in the third quarter to take the game although one of the Navy scores was called back when the referee ruled the Navy backfield was in motion.

The two teams fought to a standstill in the first quarter which was featured by Ray Busik's quick-kick, good for 85 yards before it finally bounced to a stop on Army's half-yard line.

Standing deep behind his own goal-line, Hank Mazur, spearhead of the Army offensive, took his time behind good blocking and punted out of danger, sending the ball past mid-field. Navy took the ball and on a fake pass, Busik gained eight yards before he was downed on the Cadet's 42-yard stripe.

Busik again took the ball on the next play but fumbled and Army recovered on their 28-yard stripe, ending the threat for the moment. Late in the same period, Navy again smashed into Army territory but Evans intercepted Busik's pass and halted the drive.

Army Uses T-Formation

Army, using its T-formation, opened the second quarter with a lateral pass that was good for four yards by Mazur but the play was recalled and Army was penalized for being offside. A line buck and a pass by Mazur failed to gain, and then Mazur attempted to kick into coffin corner. The ball, however, took a bad bounce and rolled into the end zone.

Navy took the ball on its 20 and gained six yards in two plays. Sherwood "Bill" Werner punted out and the ball was downed by Navy on Army's 47-yard line.

Sophomore Ralph Hill made three yards through tackle and then Mazur threw a floater pass to Kelleher that was good for 35 yards before Kelleher was downed on the Navy 15-yard line.

Navy tightened its defense and Mazur was stopped at the line of scrimmage. White hit guard for four yards but Hill lost five on the next play. Mazur threw a pass to Kelleher that was incomplete, and Navy took the ball on its own 16-yard stripe.

On the next play, Werner crashed through the center of the line for 10 yards and a first down on a fake reverse. He plunged twice through the line, gaining but three yards, and then kicked to Army's 3-yard stripe.

Mazur kicked on second down, and Bob Clark, Navy safety, took the ball on his 21-yard line and returned it 19 yards. Bob Clark raced around right end for five yards, and a plunge and reverses by Werner and Clark netted four more, Navy kicked out to Mazur who took the ball on his 21-yard line.

Hill Runs 58 Yards

Mazur took the ball on the next play but gave it to his young running mate, Hill, on a reverse and the ghostly sophomore galloped up the sidelines for 58 yards, reaching Navy's 21-yard stripe before being run out of bounds by Werner.

Army took a five-yard penalty for being off-side, but Mazur took the ball on the next play and raced through right tackle to the Navy one-yard stripe. Mazur bucked the ball to the one-foot line and then called on Watkins, who was stopped inches from the goal. On the next play Watkins crashed over for the touchdown.

Fedon, Navy line-man, broke through and blocked Smith's try-for-point from placement.

Roberts kicked off for Army and Bob Clark took it on his five-yard line, Clark fell before Army players were within 30 yards of him. Werner then opened up with a short pass that caught Army off balance and Zechella took the ball on Navy's 21-yard line. Werner again passed to Zechella who threw a lateral pass to Joods. Joods raced to the Army 45-yard line before the Cadets smothered him.

Werner was caught behind the line of scrimmage on the next play and then fumbled the ball. Whitlow recovered on the Navy 44-yard line. Army took the ball with seconds to go Mazur threw two successive passes. One was incomplete but White took the next one and raced to Navy's 35-yard line before being downed just as the gun barked.

Scoring Position Perfect

Navy turned on the power in the third, paced by Busik's great running and a long pass to reach Army's 16-yard stripe. Navy spread the Army defense on a fake pass, and then crashed through the line for 15 yards and had the ball in perfect scoring position.

Phil Hurt came into the Navy backfield and smashed across on the next play. Leonard cooly split the uprights and Navy took a 7 to 6 lead.

Bob Clark replaced Busik in the Navy backfield and alternated with Werner in carrying the ball through and around the Army defense line until they reached the Cadets' 17-yard line. Clark took the ball on a beautiful off-tackle smash and gained 14 yards.

Werner then scored from the one-foot line but the play was called back and Navy was penalized for having the backfield in motion.

Bob Clark took the ball on the next play in an attempted pass. He was trapped far back of the line of scrimmage when he found his receivers covered but slashed his way out of the bevy of Army tacklers, reversed his field and outran the entire Army club to score standing up. Leonard converted, and Navy had a 14 to 6 lead.

Army came roaring back into the game in the fourth quarter and with Mazur, the will-of-the-wisp Cadet passer pacing the attack, threatened to put Navy into danger. Following up a series of line plays, Mazur passed to Ray Hill who raced to the Navy's 18-yard line.

Mazur again attempted to pass but Busik intercepted the heave and ended the threat. After that the two clubs were forced into a punting duel in which neither side gained any advantage when powerful defense alignments halted the running game on both sides.

UNDEFEATED AGGIES TAKE BAD BEATING

Texas State U. Easily Win While 40,000 Spectators Watch Football Game

United Press

COLLEGE STATION, Texas November 27.—The undefeated Texas Aggies, with the Southwest Conference championship already clinched, were wiped off the field today by the University of Texas. The State University boys, with a loss and a tie against them for the season, easily won the game, 23 to 0.

Forty-thousand spectators were on hand for the "Thanksgiving Day game," while another 5,000 were turned away.

The game was scoreless until the last minute of the first half. Spec Sanders, taking the ball in his own territory, raced 50 yards to the Aggies' 18-yard stripe. A couple of line plunges put the ball on the nine, when brilliant Jack Crain kicked a field goal.

In the third quarter, the State boys practically ran the champion Aggies off the field. Jack Crain began by taking the kickoff behind his own goal and racing to the Aggie 20-yard line, Several plays later, from the 9-yard line, Crain carried the ball across.

Shortly after the next kick-off, Crain in the safety position, returned a punt to midfield. On the next play, Pete Layden tossed a 42-yard pass to Malcolm Kutner who scampered the remaining eight yards to score.

In the fourth stanza, climaxing a 47-yard march, Orban Sanders crashed over the goal line from the four. From then on, Texas played with third stringers who effectively muzzled an Aggie passing attack.

The Aggies' running game collected only five yards all afternoon, Texas made 323 yards from scrimmage.

'Wrong' Turkey Day

United Press

NEW YORK, November 27.—Numerous colleges and universities throughout the nation showed little respect for President Roosevelt's proclamation naming last Thursday as Thanksgiving Day and today clashed in their annual "Turkey Day" contests.

Many of the games were scheduled long before the season opened and before the President made his proclamation, and it was too late to switch schedules since some of the teams would have had to play three games within the space of one week if the contests had been moved back.

What of the Rialto?

Shiro Higuchi, Minoru Obinata, Jun Midorikawa and Yasuko Sugika.

Midori Ishii, a young dancer of note, who planned to present a performance this month, cancelled her schedule. Consequently, her participation in the dance contest to be sponsored by the Japan Cultural Central League has been abandoned.

The Dai Nippon Gageki Kyokai (the Japan "Paper Theater" Association) has decided to raise the fund of ¥10,000 for arms, which will be donated to the Ministry of War, taking advantage of "Kigensetsu" (The Japanese Empire Day), February 11, 1942. The campaign has already started by the members of the Association through their daily showing of "paper theater" on the street.

Under the joint auspices of the Tokyo Municipal Government and the Japan Dance Federation, a big-scale dance program will be presented at the Hibiya Public Hall, December 13. At the same hall, another performance will be given on February 15 next year, for which preparations have been commenced by the executive committee of the Federation headed by Tojo Hanayagi, Tokubei Hanayagi and Miyo Ishii.

The Bisenkai, a group of Japanese dancers headed by Senryu Nishikawa, will present a program at the Gunjin Kaikan, Kudan, at 6 p.m. December 7. The program will be divided into three parts, namely, ballets, classical and modern Japanese dances. "Mizuho Odori" (The Dance of Harvest) will be the feature presentation.

Fukuko Sayo, star dancer of the Takarazuka Girls' Opera Company, has been assigned to two important roles in the current performance at the Kitano Gekijo, Osaka, where all members of three classes, Snow, Moon and Flower, are jointly playing. She takes the male lead in "Sato Tadanobu" (a historical play) and romantic female lead in "Kaguya Hime" (Lady Kaguya). Opposite her are Otome Amatsu and Kayoko Kumono. Her Tokyo performance is scheduled at the local Takarazuka Gekijo in January.

(With Uzayemon Ichimura, Koshiro Matsumoto and Kichiyemon Nakamura in the van, the Minamiza, Kyoto, opened early this week to present the annual grand performance called "Kaomise Kogyo." Two different programs are given daily. The matinee consists of "Nanatsu no Men" (Seven Masks), "Meiboku Sendaihagi" (A Faithful Nurse), "Kurozuka" (A Demon at Kurozuka), and "Kikubatake" (Hogen's Secret Military Book). The evening show includes "Kanjincho" (Benkei at the Ataka Barrier), "Matsuura no Taiko" (Lord Matsuura and 47-Ronin), "Genyadana" (the Romance of Otomi) and "Yasuna" (Yasuna's Mad Scene).

Goro Soganoya, Japan's foremost comedian, who is now playing at the Kabukiza, Osaka, will probably play at the local Shimbashi Embujo next month. His engagement at this theater in January each year has been a long-established custom in the calendar of the Tokyo theatrical events.

The Bungakuza modern-school dramatic troupe will play at the Kokumin Shin Gekijo, Tsukiji, to present the year-end activity. December 16 and 17 have been fixed as the dates for the performance.

Loyolans Not 'Bums'

United Press

LOS ANGELES, November 27.—Loyola University's football squad went on strike yesterday, when its members protested that they were not bums and demanded that they be permitted to keep their travel jackets. They turned in their football uniforms, but not the bright red and gray jackets, and said they would not practice if the Athletic department insisted on their returning the jackets.

JOCHI SETTLEMENT NOW 10 YEARS OLD

10th Anniversary Celebration Held at Machiya, Arakawa-ku

Celebrating the tenth anniversary of the founding of Jochi Koseikan, formerly called the Jochi Catholic Settlement, located at Machiya, Arakawa-ku, a benefactor's meeting was convened recently to express gratitude to the numerous friends and benevolent societies which had collaborated in the human task of cheering up the destitutes in the once improverished district of Machiya.

The meeting was presided over by Father A. Michel, present director of the settlement who reviewed the object and aim of the mission as well as the results attained during the 10 years when the settlement was first established in the late autumn of 1931 by Father Hugo Lassalle, professor of Jochi (Sofia) University.

In his welcome speech delivered in Japanese, Father Michel explained that the purpose of the celebration was to bring home the spirit and enthusiasm of the foundation days to the students now engaged at present in settlement work. Moreover, he stated the occasion was being celebrated with the idea of inspiring both the parents and children of the neighborhood with sentiments of joy and gratitude.

Many Attend Function

Besides the benefactors who were present, the celebration was participated in by a representative of the ward office of Arakawa-ku and delegates from the neighboring social institutions as well as professors of Jochi University and girl students of Seishin Gakuin.

Following Father Michel's address, various sectional reports and congratulatory speeches were delivered. Later by way of displaying their talents for the guests, all the youthful performers from the tiny tots of the kindergarten to the girls who have left school gave theatrical performances replete with dances, songs and skits.

Before the celebration, an informal meeting was held which was participated in by former collaborators of the settlement, doctors of Keio University and students of Jochi University, in the course of which both encouragement and practical advice was given to their present successors.

The event was marked also by a ceremony specially intended for the parents and children of the neighborhood. The children of the kindergarten as well as the boys and girls of the Kodomo-Kai showed their elders what they had learned and could do by giving a series of thespian plays.

In the evening, the celebration was featured by the presence of Father Lassalle, who spoke to the children about the early struggles and difficulties encountered by the pioneers and the sacrifices made to carry on the settlement. At another gathering, the lofty ideals and tasks of the Kodomo-Kai, which has now sent forth many old "graduates" as soldiers to Manchoukuo and China, others as immigrants to the South Sea Isles were recalled for the children.

Founded in 1931

Birth of the Jochi Koseikan dates back to 1931 when the work for establishing a settlement in the slums of Machiya was first undertaken by a group of student boarders of Jochi University. They took up their quarters in the slums and the first thing they did was to educate the children of the neighborhood by grouping them into a Kodomo-Kai. They assisted them with their home tasks, mingled and entertained them and occasionally took them out on excursions. The destitues among the children were not overlooked for the students supplied them with school equipment while the poorest households were provided with clothing and articles of furniture.

Meanwhile, in order to cope with the ever expanding philanthropic mission, two new branches were added, one was a kindergarten and the other, a free medical consultation dispensary. For the latter, the settlement secured the services of Keio University's "Eisho-kai". Three years later, a new site was acquired and a building was erected to facilitate both work and play since the new premises boasts a yard.

JAPANESE IN AMERICA NOT ANXIOUS TO LEAVE

Only 35 of 2,000 Nationals in New York Had Applied for Their Return Passage

United Press

NEW YORK, November 29.—A survey of Japanese nationals yesterday disclosed that only 35 of 2,000 Japanese nationals in New York had applied through the Consulate-General for return passages, indicating that the total evacuating may reach 100.

A Consulate source said that nationals had not been ordered home, but said that there were no business reasons for their remaining here. The source declared that it was entirely up to individuals whether they leave or remain.

The Japanese Club will remain open but the Japanese Institute will be closed.

ROOKIES STILL FILL MAJOR LEAGUE GAPS

Dearth of Materials From Sticks Untrue—Witness Reiser, Rizutto, Etc.

By PAT ROBINSON

I.N.S.

NEW YORK, November 15.—Certain members of the crying towel set among the major league baseball scouts have said repeatedly this past season that there were no more good rookies coming up to fill the gaps left by the passing of old stars.

But a glance today at the past performance sheet for the season just ended discloses that these mournful birds must have been talking through their chapeaux. You can find youthful stars for every position on the diamond.

Let's take a look at the records. First, we have Pete Reiser, brilliant centerfielder of the Dodgers, the first rookie to lead the National League in hitting. Pete cost the Dodgers a century note and today he couldn't be bought for a thousand such notes.

The Tigers have one of the coming stars of the game in Pat Mullin, a fast, hard-hitting outfielder who was burning up the American league until he was hurt.

The Phillies came up with Danny Litwhiler, a fellow who really can go get 'em and who is destined to be a home run hitter de luxe. What's wrong with an outfield composed of those three youngsters?

Rookie Infields Also Abundant

Well, you may say that's just an outfield; what about the infield? O.K. Let's see what we can find for the infield. There's Nick Etten of the Phils. A lad with a home run wallop and an improving fielder. The Phils shelled out $10,000 to Baltimore for him and he would bring five times that amount in the open market today.

Alongside of Nick we may put Frank Crespi of the Cardinals, a brilliant flashy second baseman today and a great prospect for tomorrow.

At short we have one of the best in the Yanks' little Phil Rizzuto, who with Joe Gordon, comprises the best keystone combination in the game. Here's a youngster who can field with anybody and a .300 hitter in his first year.

At third we won't have to apologize for rookie Chuck Aleno of the Reds, a big fielder with power and speed.

Catching Talent Plentiful

What's wrong with that infield? And all rookies, remember.

As for catchers, how about Walker Cooper of the Cardinals and Clyde McCullough and Bob Scheffing of the Cubs?

That leaves only the pitchers and we can name several, some of whom already have made their mark, and all of whom seem destined for stardom.

For instance, the Cards came up with the best lefthander in the National league in the person of Ernie White, the mainstay of their staff. And not far behind him is Cardinal Howard Pollet, a sensation in the closing weeks of the race. And still another red bird, Howard Krist.

Classy Hurlers Easy to Find

And offhand, we can include in our rookie pitching roster such present or future stars as Mickey Harris, Heber Newsome and Earl Johnson of the Red Sox; Bob Muncrief of the Browns; Tom Ferrick and Phil Marchildon of the Browns; Art Johnson of the Braves; Paul Erickson, to say nothing of Charley Stanceau and Norman Branch of the Yanks.

If you could get that bunch on one club you wouldn't finish far from the top in either league.

So let's hear no more about the dearth of rookies. The sticks are still producing them in profusion.

Michigan State Coach Can Boast He Trained Many Players for Pro

I.N.S.

EAST LANSING, Michigan, November 15.—Coach Charley Bachman of Michigan State College today can boast the distinction of having sent about as many players into professional football as any other collegiate mentor in the nation. Since coming to State to take up the duties of head coach in 1933, Bachman has prepared eleven gridders for service in the play-for-play ranks. The Detroit Lions have attracted the most State alumni to their fold, including Ed Klewicki, Russell Lay, Sid Wagner, Harry Speelman, Dave Diehl and Johnny Pingel. USSISHKIN, LEADER OF ZIONISTS, DIES

Jewish National Fund Head Led Palestine Fight For Lands

Menachem Mendel Ussishkin, Zionist leader and world president of the Jewish National Fund, Zionist land-purchasing agency, died at the age of 78, reports a Jerusalem dispatch to The New York Herald Tribune on October 2. He had been recuperating from an operation, which he underwent at Hadassah Hospital here.

As president of the Jewish National Fund, Mr. Ussishkin was instrumental in the establishment of many Jewish settlements in Palestine and in the acquisition of large tracts of land as national Jewish holdings. When partition of Palestine was broached by the British Government in 1927 after the Arab-Jewish disorders, he was its bitterest opponent, advocating retention of the Biblical boundaries of Palestine for the Jewish people.

He was a delegate representing the Zionist movement at the Peace Conference in Paris in 1919. The next year he was appointed chief of the Zionist Commission in Palestine, and in that capacity he forced the purchase of the Jezreel Valley lands. Later, when he became president of the Jewish National Fund, he devoted his efforts to the policy of redeeming Palestine through agricultural colonization.

At his death he was president of the Zionist General Council and executive chairman of the Hebrew University, which was started with funds which he helped raise.

A founder of the first modern Zionist society, Chovevei Zion, while he was still in college, he was head of the former Russian Zionist Organization and recently broadcast from the Holy Land to the Soviet Jews, marking the first such contact since the advent of the Communist regime.

He was born in the Russian town of Dubrowna in 1863. He played a prominent role in the proceedings of the first Zionist Congress in 1897 as a member of the Presidium, and was associated with Dr. Theodor Herzl, leader in political Zionism.

He first set foot in the Holy Land in 1891. At his death he lived in Ussishkin Street, named for him, in Rehavia, a section of Jerusalem. He made several tours of the United States and Canada in the interests of the Jewish National Fund.

PLANS ARMY NINES IN SEMI-PRO BALL

High Simon Pure Official Working to Have 3,200 Soldier Teams in Camps

I.N.S.

WASHINGTON, November 15.—If Ray Dumont, president of the National Semi-Pro Baseball Congress, has his way, there will be 3,200 soldier baseball teams participating in 200 district semi-pro tournaments in army camps next year.

Dumont is attempting to work out, with Major T. E. (Ted. Banks, former Idaho football coach now with the morale division of the War Department, a project where by the Federal Government would take over the district tournaments at the army cantonments. Under the plan, the winners of the army tournaments would be eligible for the 48 State playoffs that the Congress sponsors, the winners of which go to Wichita, Kansas, for the national finals.

"These district tournaments will serve several good purposes, the foremost of which will be recreation for the soldiers." Dumont said, "and in providing recreation, they will prove an asset to morale."

Army teams participated in all but six State tournaments this year, according to Dumont, and two of them—Camp Shelby, Mississippi, and MacDill Field, Florida won State titles. Fort Riley, runnerup in the Kansas series, finished seventh in the National title play.

Dumont said that this was "a good record" for the army teams, but added that "enough service men didn't play ball." Under his proposal, he said, "Thirty-two hundred teams of soldiers can play ball in the 200 district tournaments right in their own backyards."

SERBIA WITH VOLUNTEERS MOPPING UP GUERRILLAS

Reports Say About 1,800 Killed and 1,500 Made Prisoner In November

United Press

BERLIN, November 28.—Reliable quarters stated yesterday that strongly reinforced German occupation forces in Serbia, supported by "volunteer" units under General Ivan Nedich were engaged at present in carrying out a large-scale offensive against organized Serbian insurgent guerrillas.

Official and semi-official reports from Belgrade indicated that during November alone at least 1,800, and probably a far larger number of insurgents were killed and 1,500 were taken prisoner in a series of pitched battles with Genera Nedich's troops.

During the previous four months, at least 950 insurgents were killed.

These figures did not include those killed in battles with the Germans or hundreds of Serbians executed outright.

Reliable sources said that Serbian insurgents had seized control of virtually the entire rugged mountain area of Serbia west of the Morava River and as far north as Sava when the Germans began their offensive a few weeks ago.

U.S. Warplane Deliveries

Reuters

LOS ANGELES.—Delivery of warplanes and aeronautical equipment for Britain in the first eight months of 1941 totaled $330,000,000, according to the American Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce. Only $6,000,000 came under the Lease-Lend Act as most companies are still working on orders placed before passing of the act. British orders given before the act came into operation totaled $2,000,000,000, and by September 1 about $1,300,000,000 was reported to have been contracted under the Lease-Lend Act.

ICELANDERS OPPOSE PERMANENT STAY

Hope Britons Will Go Home After Present War Is Over

Prime Minister Herman Jonasson said in an interview that "it was the fervent hope of all his countrymen that "Britain will keep her word and withdraw naval, army and air forces from Iceland at the end of the war," says a Reykjavik dispatch appearing in The New York Herald Tribune.

Mr. Jonasson made the statement in reply to a question concerning the paramount fear of Icelanders that Britain will retain a part of their island as a naval base after the war.

"England is fighting for establishment of good faith among nations, and her sons' blood is being shed for that principle," the 42-year-old Premier said. "Should we doubt the British when they say they will leave?"

Some Icelanders say that Britain's navy coveted parts of Iceland as a naval base long before the World War. They have no fears about the good faith of the Americans, but they say that "Britain never lets go."

Mr. Jonasson, who has been Prime Minister seven years, is of medium height, with broad shoulders, curly hair and a cold blue eye. He was middleweight wrestling champion when he was at Reykjavik University, and he looks it.

Referring to a rape case in which four American marines are implicated, he said, "We don't judge a country by a few incidents." Outcome of their secret trial has not been made public.

Mr Jonasson said that the presence of thousands of troops who have been separated from wives and sweethearts is "the first of our problems."

"It would be as difficult in Britain if fifteen million foreign soldiers were quartered around London," he said. Sadly he remarked that there are "many difficulties, some of them of great magnitude," but he expressed the hope that "with cooperation we may settle some of them."

The Prime Minister acknowledged there exists a "certain temporary prosperity," but he said it was doubtful if the occupation would bring any lasting benefits to the country.

BLAMEY IS INTERVIEWED ON REACHING SINGAPORE

Australia Hopes There Will Be No Pacific War, Commander-In-Chief States

Reuters

SINGAPORE.—"Australia hopes that there will be no war in the Pacific. She cannot see that the issues are vital enough to the other side to make this necessary," declared General Blamey, Commander-in-Chief of Australian forces in the Middle East, in an interview here today.

However, if "the balloon goes up, Australia will be ready to see the thing through to the finish, and she is confident of final success."

General Blamey, who arrived here yesterday from Australia, will stay in Malaya for a few days, during which he will hold discussions with Air Chief Marshal Sir Robert Brooke-Popham, British Commander-in-Chief in the Far East. He will proceed "shortly" to resume his command in the Middle East.

General Blamey declared that Australia was taking the war in general and the Far Eastern situation with great seriousness. She was determined to see the thing through and was cheerfully undergoing the privations involved, he said.

As regards the Libyan campaign, General Blamey declared that he was confident that the campaign was going according to plan.

Questioned regarding America's part in the war, he stated that Democracy should be saved and all democratic nations should put their weight into the work necessary to save it—otherwise there was a risk that Democracy might sink. It was his opinion that America should throw in her contribution toward saving Democracy as soon as possible. Whatever America decided, however, he had faith enough that in the long run the Democracies would save themselves, but "the democratic on long run is apt to be a slow run and a costly one," General Blamey added.

MEIJI AND WASEDA IN 19TH RUGBY TILT

Tough Surugadai Fifteen to Try To Gain 4th Successive Championship

For the 19th time since 1923, Meiji and Waseda will meet on the gridiron Sunday afternoon. This match climaxes the Kanto Intercollegiate Rugby League season and pits two undefeated, untied fifteens. Kickoff is set for 2:30 p.m. at the Meiji Shrine stadium.

Despite the tough fight the Meiji ruggers had with St. Paul's last week, the Surugadai fifteen is a slight favorite to make it four straight over Waseda and clinch the League title for the fourth consecutive year.

Comparative scores place both clubs on practically even terms, although Meiji has rushed across a total of 376 points as against Waseda's 292, but Waseda has limited the opponents to 19 points as against Meiji's 52.

The Meiji versus Waseda series has furnished more than its share of upsets, the most recent of which was Meiji's 27 to 6 triumph three years ago. However the last two seasons Meiji has left no doubt of their superiority by winning in decisive fashion. The classic series now stand at nine games apiece.

Meiji primarily is an offensive team that rolls with a powerful attack with fast big forwards. The probable Meiji forwards will have Saigo, Matsuoka, Sakashita, Jun Matsumoto, Hayashi, Hanaoka, Takashima and Shibata, all veteran campaigners. This combination has played havoc with all teams for the last three years.

Waseda is expected to start the same line-up that has shown its heels to five league opponents and several non-league matches. Hara, Takano, Inouye, Tojo, Nunomura, Abe, Tsujii and Murakawa should start at the forwards, with Suzuki and Endo at the half supported by Ohkochi, Suzuki, Fukutome, Senda and Uzawa throwing up a strong defense.

As Waseda last beat Meiji in 1937, the Tonion ruggers are victory hungry and they are expected to shoot the works. Meiji supporters claim that their team is out to create an all-time record, league champions for the fourth successive year.

The match has the ear-marks of a thriller and the Shrine stadium is expected to be packed.

IRANIAN ARMED BANDS STILL SHOW ACTIVITY

Demobilized Troops Still Rampant in Country and Fail To Surrender

Transocean

ANKARA.—Disclosure that armed bands are active in parts of Iran, where they have virtually become the dominant authority, was made by the Chief of the Iranian Gendarmerie, General Saludi, in a report today according to advices from Teheran.

He said that most of the arms in the possession of the demobilized troops of the Iranian Army had not been surrendered in conformity with the terms of the agreement between Iran and the British and Soviet military authorities.

It has been ascertained that the discharged soldiers and officers had taken their arms with them and concealed them in various parts of the country.

These arms were then utilized by organized bands, whose influence became preponderent in certain sections of the country.

The existence of these bands undoubtedly strained the relations existing between the Iranian Government on the one hand, and the British and Soviet military authorities on the other, General Saludi reported.

In conclusion, he asserted that the influence of these armed bands had become so great in certain districts that it would be necessary for the Government to take positive action to restore order.

SIX WEEKEND GAMES SLATED AT Y.C.A.C.

First Item on Schedule Is Rugby Game This Afternoon

One rugby and two basketball games will comprise the Yokohama Country and Athletic Club's sports program for this afternoon, while on Sunday the club's athletes will participate in two soccer matches during the morning and a hockey encounter in the afternoon. All the contests will be played at the Y.C. and A.C.

The first item on the schedule will be the rugby game this afternoon between the club's unbeaten and united 15 and the Yokohama Shogyo Senmon College squad set for 3 p.m. The clubbers have won all seven games they played this season, scoring 256 points and having only 28 made against them.

Playing Return Game

The Y.C. and A.C. lady cagers will play a return game with the Shirakiku basketball team at 4 p.m. today. The former quintette lost a close and hard fought contest to the latter a week ago, and another interesting fracas is expected.

The club's men basketeers who have won all three games they have played so far this fall, will take on the Y-Sen Club five after the ladies are finished with the court. This tilt, which will in all probability be fast and produce some good basketball, is scheduled for 5:30 p.m. today.

The early birds on Sunday morning will be the players of the club's second soccer team who are booked to play a return game with the Yokohama Third Middle School Old Boys at 10 a.m. This eleven has kept pace with the rugger squad by having won all its seven games this season, and is hoping the saying that "the early bird catches the worm" will apply to the seconds Sunday morning for hopes are high for an eighth successive victory.

Next to appear on the club field will be the Y.C. and A.C. first soccer team and the Tokyo K.S.F.E. Club side, with the kickoff planned for 11 a.m. or thereabouts. The players from the capital are reported to be fine footballers and a keen and well played contest is anticipated.

On Sunday afternoon there will be an intra-club hockey match in which the married members will be opposed by "those who don't have to ask permission to play," as one of the single players put it. This married-single game is scheduled for 2:30 p.m.

Prior to this, there will be a ladies' hockey practice, commencing at 2 p.m.

Tennis Tourney Set

With the club's autumn tennis tournament having been held up considerably by poor weather a number of matches in the various events will no doubt be played off over the weekend, provided Jupiter Pluvius decides not to visit the club until after Sunday.

The Y.C. and A.C. line-ups will probably be as follows:

'Pepper' Martin Makes Hit in Pacific League but Cardinals Want Him Back

By ROBERT C. WEAKLEY

I.N.S.

SACRAMENTO, California, November 16.—John "Pepper" Martin admitted he was behind the "eightball" today.

The former St. Louis Cardinal star isn't losing his "Pepper" as manager of the Pacific Coast league leading Sacramento team, but the Wild Horse of the Osage is disturbed somewhat by rumors flaring high wide and handsome to the effect his former St. Louis fans want Pepper Martin back in Sportsman's Park, St. Louis stealing bases there as of yore.

"Would you rather be manager of the Sacramento team or return to the Cards?" he was asked.

"Now that there question is mighty unfair," the Oklahoma Wild Horse drawled. "If I say I would rather go back to St. Loo, I'd make a lot of friends around here mad at me.

"And if I said I'd rather be here, I'd get a lot of my friends back East sorta mad.

"Nope, I just can't answer that question. You see I'm having lots of fun being manager of the Sacramento team and I've had fun with the Cards. I've got lots of mighty good friends both places and I wouldn't want to cause any bad feeling.

"As to my going back to St. Louis—they must be a bunch of rumors. I never heard of that before and it's nice I have friends like that who want to see me come back."

Pepper had just returned from a hunting trip in search for deer in the California foothills. As a hunter, he admitted he hadn't had much luck but he took his disappointment philosophically by observing there were a lot more days left of the open season.

Martin must be having fun. When the Sacramento solons aren't playing baseball, he's out touring the California landscape and his friends complain that once outside the ball park he's hard to find.

He lives with his family, including his wife, three daughters and "Mutt" (the dog) in a typical Spanish colonial type house four blocks from the Sacramento Cardinal field. His usual form of relaxation is to load the family car with his wife and children and go for a drive through the Sacramento Valley, or to the Sierra mountains. Martin also has a penchant for watching "bush-league" teams, like those comprising the Sacramento Valley league.

Sacramento, a good baseball town, has taken Pepper to its heart. Fans love his antics, but more than that are proud that the Solons who placed fifth in the Pacific Coast league last year, got on the victory road this season.

Fans scream with delight when Pepper puts on his act with the umpire. When the ump calls a close one, the Solon Peppery manager usually takes a seat on the ground, silently pulling grass and eating it.

When the ump can't stand it any longer, Pepper dolefully remarks:

"Afraid you missed one there" and goes over to the dugout.

When Pepper first took over as Sacramento manager last spring, fresh from St. Louis, he told his players he wanted to see "Gasehouse Baseball." "Gasehouse baseball," he explained, was the sort of game where every player gives a little more than 100 per cent effort and ability.

As to rumors of Martin returning to St. Louis, Phil Bartelme, President of the Sacramento Baseball Club, had this to say, and not without emphasis:

"Ridiculous! Pepper Martin will be here next year. Why any idea of giving Martin back to the Cards is as preposterous as saying there's an iceberg floating down the Sacramento river!"

And since the temperature in these parts is hovering around the 100-degree mark—most unhealthy iceberg weather—it seems John Pepper Martin, the Wild Horse of the Osage, will have to disappoint his Eastern fans.

'Satchel' Paige, Star Negro Pitcher Highest Paid, Not Feller Nor Newsome

I.N.S.

DETROIT, November 16.—There is a lot of discussion throughout baseball circles today as to whether Bob Feller of the Cleveland Indians or Buck Newsom of the Detroit Tigers is the highest paid pitcher in the game, but as a matter of fact, neither is entitled to this distinction, according to LeRoy "Satchel" Paige of the Kansas City Monarchs in the Negro American League.

Paige is not a salaried worker. He received $2,000 for pitching a complete game on Sunday or holidays and will, for a guarantee of $300 or more, work for three innings for any team that seeks his service during the week.

Continuing this routine until late October, Satchel then moves southward to pitch for teams in Puerto Rico, and may include visits to Mexico and Central America in his itinerary. After hurling his final game in the 1941 season, Paige reckons he will have earned about $50,000 as compared to Newsom who receives about $35,000 per season and Feller, who gets about the same amount.

Coming up from the South as a member of the Birmingham (Ala.) Black Barons, Paige arrived on the baseball scene about 14 years ago and since that time has pitched at the rate of about three or four games a week, facing the best of the Negro and white baseball talent.

Such well-known sluggers as Joe DiMaggio, who batted seven times against Paige before he connected for a hit have found their booming bats somewhat silenced by his speedball offerings.

A radio announcer once asked Satchel if he was ever bothered with a sore arm.

"Yassuh," he replied.

"And what did you do about!" questioned the announcer.

"Ah just poured a little hot watah on it—it was all right then. Never gave me no more trouble."

SHANGHAI, December 4.—Chungking's message obtained here today has revealed that the Chungking regime yesterday announced its holding of the ninth plenary session of the Executive and Supervisory Committees of the Kuomintang there within this month.

The convocation of the ninth plenary session which has been postponed repeatedly so far due to the unsettled political condition in the Chiang Kai-shek's regime, is deemed to be obviously designed for its showing to the Anglo-American combination the regime's readiness to deal with the Pacific crisis, as well as for concealing its daily dwindling strength of resistance and severe conflict with the Red party.

VOLUNTEER SINGERS GIVE 'THE MESSIAH'

Traditional Performance of Handel's Oratorio Directed By Ugo Nakada

Up-holding the tradition of the annual Messiale performance in Tokyo, the Tokyo Volunteer Choir presented Handel's Oratorio under the direction of Ugo Nakada, Friday evening, before a capacity audience at the Hibiya Public Hall.

Ugo Nakada, who established the tradition of this annual pre-Christmas performance with his chorus, more than one decade ago, deserves high recognition for his untiring efforts in holding together this organization and its enterprises through the vicissitudes of time and international developments. For, this annual "Messiah" performance has always been a significant event in the life of the international communities of Tokyo and Yokohama; and in former years the chorus was in its overwhelming majority composed of members of the foreign communities of the two cities.

And while many familiar faces which used to be seen every year in the auditorium to participate in this annual musical worship, were missed this time, a surprisingly large turn-out of members of the dwindling foreign community was seen Friday night at the Hibiya Public Hall. Also among the members of the chorus, which was reduced this time to about one half of its former number of approximately 200 voices, included again several foreign volunteer singers.

The soloists included Miss Eleanor Porter, soprano; Miss Sadako Sasaki, alto, who stepped in for Miss Kiyo Kono at the last hour; Saimei Gen, tenor, and Arnold Bauer, bass.

Large Orchestra Plays

For the orchestra accompaniment, a considerably large ensemble had been brought together, combined of members of Shin-ichi Suzuki's Tokyo String Orchestra; the Tokyo Symphony Orchestra, and (not mentioned on the program) the Japan Youth Symphony Orchestra.

Most praiseworthy throughout the evening was the work of the chorus, revealing the thoroughly and efficient rehearsing which must have been carried on under Mr. Nakada's direction. All choral pieces, some of which are written in a rather difficult and musically complicated style, were sung with wonderful clarity, each voice in the many fugue parts of the oratorio being brought out with precision. And in spite of the fact that this time the overwhelming majority of the chorus members were Japanese and Chosenese, the custom of past years to have the chorus sing in English was upheld also this time, with very good results.

Obviously less care had been taken for the rehearsing of the orchestra accompaniment, which was in many places disturbingly inaccurate. It is often observed that a conductor who is a chorus expert like Mr. Nakada, neglects the significance of the orchestral part.

Soloists Enjoyable

Altogether very enjoyable were the performances by the solo singers. The beautiful and voluminous soprano of Miss Porter was quite an asset of the concert, in her numerous solo airs and recitatives. Very artistic and musicianly was the singing of Miss Sasaki, whose well trained and cultivated alto voice provided some of the most beautiful impressions of the evening. Well matched were the two female voices in the alto and soprano air, "He shall feed His flock."

Also contributing to the success of the performance were the two male soloists, although their singing did not quite compare with the standard set by the two female singers.

Friday's performance also marked the 200th anniversary of the composition of the "Messiah" having been completed by Handel. Observing the tradition set in Dublin exactly two centuries ago t the oratorio's first performance, Friday's audience spontaneously rose from their seats during the singing of the "Halleltujah" chorus concluding the second part of the work.

The performance was again a great success, in every respect, and also financially, the concert, which was sponsored by the White Cross Society, must have yielded a considerable contribution to the funds for the charity work carried on by that organization.

RED BORDER INVADERS REPULSED BY JAPANESE

14 Entered Manchoukuo Through Eastern Frontier—One of Them Shot

Domei

HSINKING, December 5.—A group of invaders numbering 14 armed with one light machine-gun, and ten rifles were repulsed by Japanese patrols from Manchoukuo territory at 10:05 p.m. yesterday.

It is further reported that those invaders last night entered Manchoukuo territory from a point 2 kilometers southwest of the 18th bordermark on the eastern Soviet-Manchoukuo border.

One of them was shot, while others were repulsed by the Japanese patrols, it is added.

It is believed that those invaders apparently belonged to the Soviet side upon examining the body. It was found that boots, winter clothes and other belongings are all of the Soviet make, and moreover, Russian characters were found written on the clothes.

Record Reviews

Verdi: Rigoletto. Monologo, "Pari siamo!" and "Cortigiani, vil razza dannata." Baritone solo by Ricardo Stracciari. 12" Special Blue-Label Record. JY 648. ¥3.65.

Stracciari was singing in the opera houses of Europe 30 or 40 years ago, so this is a record of great historic interest. He has a magnificent voice and we must be grateful to the recording companies for preserving these great voices of the past. Without such records the wonderful singers of the early part of the century—Melba, Caruso, Destinn, Ruffo and others—would be but memories for the older generation and unknown to the younger generation. This record has a good orchestral accompaniment, which suggests that it is a recording with the accompaniment superimposed on the old acoustical recording to the voice, a method that has been used with success in several of Caruso's records.

The first side ("Pari siamo!") is of the meeting between the hunch-backed jester and his daughter Gilda. He knows that she is in danger from the amorous proclivities of his master the Duke of Mantua. Solemnly he warns and enjoins her to remain strictly within the house and never to venture into the town. He questions her to know if anyone has ever followed her to church. Verdi's broad catilena here receives the aggressive and forcible dramatic treatment that it requires.

The second side ("Cortigiani, vil razza") is from Act III. Gilda is abducted by the Duke's courtiers and carried off to the Duke. The jester, in despair, tries to force an entrance into the ducal palace but finds his way barred by the courtiers. Giving way to his feelings, he rages against them.

Race of courtiers, vile detestable rabble.
Have you sold her, after molesting her peace?
Where is she? Do not rouse me to madness.

His rage wears itself out and in tears he begs them to show pity on an old man whose daughter is to him more than all the world.

Stracciari's conception of the jester is shaped by intelligence no less than by feeling. The poignant tragedy of his discovery of his daughter's betrayal, his anxiety, his realization of the truth, the intensity of his "Io vo mia figlia!" and his outburst of impotent wrath, are portrayed in masterly fashion.

Ricardo Vines in Piano Recordings: "La Soiree dans Grenade" from "Estampes" (Debussy) and "Serenate" from "Piezas Caracteristicas" (Torre Bermeja) on JW 315 12", ¥3.35); "El Amor Brujo" (de Falla) on JW 316 (12", ¥3.35); "Poissons d'or" from "Images, Set 2" (Debussy) and "Seguidillas" from "Cantos de Espana" (Albeniz) on J. 5645 (10", ¥2.25).

These three records, issued in a specially prepared holder with a booklet of explanatory notes, provide an interesting selection of French and Spanish pianoforte music. Ricardo Vines is comparatively new to the list of record artists. By many he is considered to be the best interpreter of Debussy and of modern Spanish music. His playing is first-class and he evidently has sympathy with and understanding of modern music.

The "Estampes" (Impressions) are three in number—"Pagodes," "Soiree dans Grenade" and "Jardins dans la pluie." These three pieces are numbered among Debussy's best, and are splendid examples of his mature and individual style. His work holds in music the place held by the works of Cezanne and Manet in painting. "Evening in Granada" shows his gracious and aerial architecture, his wonderful gift of creating an atmosphere, at their best.

The second set of "Images" dates from 1907. In his book on French piano music Mr. Cortot says of them: "They are significant of the deliberate, and from this point final, trend, which urged Debussy toward a musical idiom as subtle as the sensations he wished to express." Of the "Poissons d'or" he writes: "A sparkling vivacity flashes in the moving water, a fleeting luminosity vanishes in passing reflections, a trembling, leaping life is unfolded before our eyes and enshrined by the magic of the music. The piece was perhaps inspired by the Oriental embroidery that Debussy was so fond of, where these wild leaps of a water faun are represented by a rich, fantastic handiwork of silk and gold." The pianist succeeds well in interpreting the composer's evocations.

Manuel de Falla and Albeniz first revealed to us the full flavor of their national music, known to us before at second-hand through the versions of French composers. Falla is associated with ballet and opera. "El Amor Brujo" (Love, the Magician) is a gipsy opera-ballet which was produced in Madrid in 1916. Here we are given piano arrangements of three pieces. The story tells of the ghost of a gipsy girl's dead lover and of how the specter is outwitted. But a detailed knowledge of the plot is by no means necessary to enjoyment of these records. Falla's strongest suit is melody and next color and atmosphere (here of the Moorish variety) and an inexhaustible invention of zestful rhythm. The "Danza Rituel del Fuego," the fire dance ritual that drives away the bad spirits during the rendezvous between the adventurous gipsy girl and the specter of her lover, has a lively interpretation—the brutal melody over the reiterated bass strikes as near to terror as the piano knows how.

Albeniz's lively and rhythmic "Seguidillas" (from "Songs of Spain") fills the second side of the 10" record and is the best played of all the pieces. It will appeal most to those who prefer straight music to program music. The "Serenate" by Torre Bermeja is a charming and gay piece and makes us look forward to further recordings of this (presumably) new Spanish composer.

Captain Bruce Smith Of Minnesota Eleven Wins Heisman Trophy

United Press

NEW YORK, November 30.—Not only are the Minnesota Golden Gophers the mythical champions of U.S. college football, but they have the year's outstanding individual performer in Captain Bruce Smith, winner of the Heisman memorial trophy. Smith, who ended his college career last week by conducting four touchdown marches in the Gophers rout of Wisconsin, was named for the award in a country-wide poll of sports writers and announcers made by the down-town athletic club of New York. Smith polled 554 votes to 345 for Angelo Bertelli of Notre Dame, his nearest rival.

government and national organization, are working out in a very limited monarchy, unhampered by imperialism, will surely find many grateful readers. The small book belongs to a series of publications designed for all who wish to make themselves acquainted with what is going on in the modern world. As everybody will easily understand, the repercussions of the revolution in Central Europe after the end of the first World War reached Sweden too.

Following the general trend, the country became automatically more democratic. It is true that the Swedish Parliament celebrated its 500th anniversary in 1935. It would, therefore, be natural for the outside observer to conclude that the political problems of Sweden had in the main been solved long ago. Actually the struggle for universal suffrage and for parliamentary government is within the memory of living generation. When the immense democratic wave swept over the country, the Social Democratic party acquired a relative, but not an absolute majority in each Chamber. Today this party became a radical middle-class party with chiefly national aims.

The economic blizzard of the world did not strike Sweden with uniform force, although the collapse of post-war prosperity in the United States, the effects of the Wall Street crash and American retrenchment on German economic life, finally Britain's renunciation of the gold standard could not but impress the country. How the Swedish Government has skillfully mastered the menacing crisis and the problem of unemployment, introducing a "new deal" in 1932, appears to be the leading idea of the author's treatise. This new system had a social significance beyond its economic and political framework. The writer shows in his survey how State and private enterprise cooperate by the way of an extensive public control.

This is the true picture of a neutral country. The problem remains how far the general change of European political affairs will affect the nation. The author restricted himself to the mere description of the present conditions which must be called excellent compared with them of many other European countries.

Reconnaissance Troops Play Vital Role in Reich

ed. The reconnaissance unit must have contacted the enemy. The staff halts for a short while. All available officers and men advance together to reconnoiter in the nearby forest. A short hand-to-hand fight ensues. A number of Polish officers and about 30 soldiers are taken prisoner. Regimental numbers are noted and taken down.

Meanwhile a lieutenant with his panzer unit passes the columns resting by the forest and explores the forest to a depth of about four kilometers. He is just about to return, when he perceives a number of Polish officers rushing toward him. One of them has just drawn the pin of a handgrenade. Lieutenant P., while turning his panzer car, leans far out of it and shoots the Pole in the chest at close range. Then he dives back into his car with lightning speed, while the grenade explodes in the hand of the man about to throw it, tearing him to pieces. The reconnaissance unit returns safely.

Meanwhile, a dispatch driver jumps off his motor cycle and delivers an order that has just come in by wireless from headquarters. The order reads: "Discontinue heading south, drive toward the east to Brest-Litovsk."

Exemplary Cooperation

The skirmish is broken off. All rush to their vehicles, prisoners and the wounded are stored on to trucks and detailed to the rear. By wireless the reconnaissance units operating 30 kilometers to the west are ordered to proceed in a easterly direction. A new spearhead is formed on the way, while the old one is recalled by wireless. All this happens in the course of a few minutes.

Due to exemplary cooperation of officers and men, wireless operators and fortune of war, a magnificent success has been achieved. A new order arrives. In the forest at Zazby-Wachely there are resting enemy concentrations to the strength of about one regiment. The regimental number has been established from prisoners taken. The strategically important reconnnoitering is carried on deep into enemy territory. Dynamiting of bridges is undertaken in the enmy's field of operations. Bridges have to be repaired in occupied territory and other difficult tasks have to be carried out besides reconnaissance duties.

At another instance, the daring feat of another Lieutenant far behind enemy lines resulted in the capture of an important center of communications on the Saone River by the blasting of rails behind the enemy lines. Due to the complete surprise by which the enemy was taken, an entire infantry regiment was taken prisoner after a fight lasting for six hours. The booty consisted of 14 train transports, consisting of 500 wagons and 50 locomotives. Whoever reads and hears about the achievements of the German Army realizes what a great part has been played by the reconnaissance troops in the great victories on all fronts.

BURMA ROAD NO HELP FOR EXPORT OF ORES

Chinese Tungsten, Antimony Shipments Decrease—Imports Of War Materials Drop

When England reopened the Burma road on October 18, 1940, American interests played an important role, as the United States Government had concluded an agreement with Chungking which provided for the delivery of $3,000,000 worth of tungsten, says the Krakauer Zeitung.

Traffic routes from and to China are not only important for the Chinese import of war material, but they are also of great importance for the export of tungsten and antimony. China is the biggest producer of these two raw materials in the world, and the supply of the international iron and steel industry with tungsten largely depends on China's ability to keep up her exports.

Soon it became apparent, however, that the reopening of the Burma road and the resumption of war material deliveries did not at the same time secure China's export possibilities. Again and again air attacks upon the most vulnerable parts of the road were made by the Japanese who rendered it impracticable for long periods. Chinese exports of tungsten dwindled continuously under the influence of the Far East conflict.

Consumption of tungsten in the United States and Germany rose from 20,905 tons in 1936 to approximately 26,400 tons in 1933, while Chinese exports dropped to 12,356 tons in 1938 and to 10,689 tons in 1939. Due to this development Spanish and Portuguese production as well as the production of South America and of other countries was increased, and their share in the supply of the industrial countries has risen. For the same reasons Chinese exports of antimony shrank, while production in other parts of the world, in Jugoslavia, Slovakia and Hungary, but also in South America kept growing.

As the harbor of Hongkong was blocked already early in 1939, and exports via Indo-China were intercepted by the Japanese, the Burma road naturally gained in importance for the Chinese producers but also for the consumers all over the world, particularly in the United States. American requirements of tungsten and antimony have increased tremendously because of the armament program and for these two raw materials the United States very much depend on imports.

The difficulties, the Chinese export of ore is facing since the outbreak of the Far East conflict, have not been relieved to any extent by the reopening of the Burma road. Increased production in countries outside of China, stimulated by the development of prices, must also be registered as a result of this conflict.

LEADING CITIES OF JAPAN TO GROW OWN VEGETABLES

Purpose of Obtaining Sufficient Self-Supply of Green Foodstuffs in Time of Air-Raids

Decision has been reached by the Agriculture and Forestry Ministry to create a grand-scale green vegetable garden in the vicinity of the leading cities in 12 prefectures for the purpose of obtaining sufficient self-supply of green foodstuffs in time of air-raids. The budget in this connection will be presented to the forthcoming Diet session.

According to the plans, the "vegetable self-supply sphere" will be designated within eight miles in the circumference of the city limits in 12 prefectures, including Tokyo, Kanagawa, Chiba, Saitama, Aichi, Osaka, Kyoto, Hyogo, Fukuoka, Nagasaki, Yamaguchi and Hiroshima.

Total area of vegetable crops will be extended to 238,000 acres, including the present producing area of 192,000 acres, to which 46,000 acres will be added.

According to an investigation by the Agriculture and Forestry Ministry, the total area of vegetable crops throughout the country in the year of 1940 was 874,000 acres. The survey indicates that a vegetable garden of 126 acres per 10,000 population will be necessary. To attain a self-sufficiency of vegetables, an area of about 46,000 acres has been lacking, out of which vegetables of 54,163,000 kan in weight will be produced.

Seeds that are to be planted in these vegetables self-supply spheres will be limited to 17 different kinds, including radish, carrot, potato, burdock, rape, onion, beans, tomatoes, spinach, and egg plants. All of the mentioned vegetables are regarded as daily necessities. Every effort will be made to control and select the good-quality seeds in order to turn out seasonable throughout the year.

BATTLE OF MONKEY ISLAND

Old-Timers Show New-Comers Who Run the Place

SAN FRANCISCO,—The Battle of Monkey Island was called off recently and Citizens returned to their normal jabbering and caper-cutting.

Strife in the monkey colony at San Francisco's Zoological Gardens came without warning. Eight new monkeys, smug with having graduated from the experimental laboratories of the Hooper Foundation, had been sent to the island.

Upon arrival, invaders were thrown into the water, chased up trees and from rock to rock. It was a free-for-all with no holds barred until Carey Baldwin, zoo director, and his assistants rounded up the invasion-resisters and tossed them into concentration camps.

Later new arrivals were released in groups of three or four. Nothing violent happened.

"I think all they wanted to do was to make it clear who was running the island," Mr. Baldwin said.

He Takes Daily Ride

MANNERHEIM EXTOLS NATION'S PATRIOTISM

Finnish Legation Here Issues Statement of Marshal Explaining Country's Stand

The Commander-in-Chief of the Finnish army, Field Marshal Mannerheim has sent a greeting to Finnish men and women, who in difficult circumstances by their labors and thoughts support the fighting soldiers according to a statement of the Finnish Legation here.

"When the Finnish nation was forced to the war, we are now waging, it is said in that greeting, all of us were perhaps not fully aware of the deadly peril in which this country was. Now after we have with our own eyes seen the enormous preparations the treacherous enemy trusting his gigantic superiority had undertaken in order to launch a simultaneous attack on us along the whole length of the thousand kilometers long frontier and the long coastline, no one doubts any longer, that Finland would have been doomed if it had not determinedly given battle because in this battle it is question of our life.

"Much is not lacking before we have achieved our strategic aims to seize from the enemy the means he has so carefully prepared for our destruction and to attain a frontier easier to defend than any previous Finnish frontier. The army fights with confident heart knowing that it is creating security for our homes, our wives and our children and for the future generations. The army has done this knowing that it has behind it, the united, confident and brave people.

"We at the front realize that we, like all the country, are facing a winter of severe trials and privations, but we know our 'sisu' (pluck) and we believe in our own powers to endure as we have always done. We must remain firm and carry our summer dreams of future through the darkness of the winter to a new day already dawning. The world and every nation that has to fight for its existence must understand us. We are not waging an imperialistic war, but we are fighting for the future and for the security of our nation."

MADRID.—The first list of men of the so-called "Blue Division," who fell in the battle against Bolshevism on the Eastern front, was published in the Madrid press.

A detailed description of the lives of these men was also given in the papers, as far as they happened to be members of the Flango or participants in the Spanish Civil War.

Among those who lost their lives are two captains, three sergeants, a sergeant-major, three lance-corporals, and four privates who had previously fought against the Reds during the Spanish Civil War. The two captains in question were members of the infantry academies, Guadalajara and Saragossa.

the globe. They demanded among others, the unconditional withdrawal of Japan from China and French Indo-China and the virtual scrapping by us of the Tripartite Alliance which forms the basis of Japan's fundamental foreign policy under the Imperial Rescript which was granted on the occasion of the pact's conclusion.

"As for the proposal of the United States for us to repudiate the National Government of China at Nanking, which has been fully cooperating with us in the construction of the East Asia Co-Prosperity Sphere, it only aroused the ire of our Government. The end of our patience was reached when the leaders of the American Government insisted that we should part company with the National Government which was formed by thinking Chinese with a long-range view of the situation and which has since its inauguration been making a conscientious effort to help bring about in East Asia an Order which would permit all inhabiting this area to live in peace and prosperity.

Pressure Is Applied

"As we forged ahead with the construction of the co-prosperity sphere, the United States led Great Britain and other countries, hostile toward us, in applying economic pressure against our country in order to make us abandon our national policy.

"It was under these circumstances that the Imperial Rescript declaring war against the United States and the British Empire was granted.

"The meaning of Japan's action in entering a state of war with America and Britain is clear. The declaration of war was for the purpose of defending our basic rights. Economic pressure is a by far more formidable weapon in a total war than armed force. For the United States and Great Britain to brand us as an aggressor nation while establishing a general economic line against us is utterly out of place.

"The struggle between Japan and the United States and Great Britain is nothing more than a conflict between our ideals and those of the Americans and Britons. It is a conflict between the Japanese way of government and that of the Anglo-Saxon race. Our way, called "kodo," is based on the principle of justice. The way of the Anglo-Saxons rests on military force. No war has been embarked upon by our country whose aim was not to contribute to world peace. The basic policy of our country is to construct a world under which all peoples will be in their rightful places and where every man belongs.

Meddling Caused Trouble

"The cause of the conflict between us and America and Britain was the insistence with which these countries interfered with questions which concern only Japan and China. Has Japan interfered with problems of Mexico and Brazil? I would say that the present conflict is the result of an attempt on the part of America and Britain to make their common way which is based on military force prevail in East Asia where this country with the cooperation of other races inhabiting this area is pressing the program of constructing an order of co-prosperity.

"The principle of the eight corners of the universe under one roof has provided the motive power for all undertakings taken in hand by this country in the past. We fought the Sino-Japanese and the Russo-Japanese war under the same policy of making a peaceful advance in the southern area which is necessary to attain our great national goal.

"The Japanese people are grimly resolved. Nothing on earth will crush their iron will to surmount the difficulties besetting our country. Our enemies, America and Britain, are favored by nature. Moreover, their empires are spread over the world. There is no question of their material strength. But materials are no decisive factor in an armed conflict. Our country is not so rich in natural resources as America or Britain. But we have the sound national spirit which will make up for the fact that our supplies of war materials are not ample as those of our enemies. The great achievements of our forefathers show that we can overcome difficulties arising from the inadequacy of our supplies of vital materials if we mobilize our spiritual resources.

Big Task Ahead

"It is time that we invoked the aid of our great forefathers whose display of the highest order of heroism enabled them to solve national difficulties. We do not dream of attacking London or New York. Our war aim is to complete our program of constructing the East Asia Co-Prosperity Sphere.

"We must not be under any illusion regarding the magnitude of the task before us. We must step up reforms which are absolutely necessary if the Anglo-Saxons are to be brought to their knees in East Asia. We should not hesitate about effecting reforms in the administrative machinery of our country if such reforms are called for by the situation which has been caused by our declaration of war against America and Britain. We must not hesitate about introducing reforms in our individual lives, if such reforms are calculated to aid the attainment of our national ends. The course of an expanding nation is beset with difficulties. We must be determined to face a series of formidable difficulties. Our forefathers overcame their national difficulties. We must overcome ours. Whether we can ride over the present emergency depends solely upon the attitude of the Yamato race."

PREMIER OF MANCHU VOWS COOPERATION

Says Time Has Come to Drive Out 400-Year White Domination

Domei

HSINKING, December 8.—Premier Marshal Chang Ching-hui of Manchoukuo at 5 p.m. today made public a statement pledging full cooperation with Japan in the current war against Britain and the United States.

Premier Chang stressed in the statement that all East Asiatic peoples in close unity must expel the United States and Britain which oppressed and exploited the Asiatic peoples during the past 400 years. He said the time has come for Manchoukuo to put into practice the principle of oneness in virtue and mind with Japan, adding that the people of Manchoukuo have completed all necessary preparation for that purpose.

"No matter what may happen," he said, "the defense of the northern frontier will not crumble."

In conclusion, the Manchoukuo Premier expressed his firm belief that the Japanese forces will win the final victory and thus establish successfully the East Asia Co-Prosperity Sphere.

CHINATOWN POSTOFFICE SEEKS A NEW LOCATION

Frequency of Requests for Cooks Prompting Mail Agency to Shift

SAN FRANCISCO.—The Chinese postoffice in the heart of Chinatown, established in 1930, is looking around for a new location—"something with more atmosphere."

Majority of outgoing mail is labeled "Tom Bo," Chinese for "registered mail," most of the letters carrying money drafts for South China firms.

"But we don't look like a Chinese postoffice," insists Acting Superintendent Leland G. Kimlau.

People from uptown keep asking where they can get a good cook. "We look more like an employment agency than anything else," Kimlau explains.

British Concession Seized

TIENTSIN, December 8.—An undisclosed unit of Japanese Army forces, simultaneously with its occupation of the British concession here, issued a proclamation to the following effect:

"The Imperial Japanese Army forces have advanced into the British concession, blockaded the surrounding area, and at the same time occupied important points in the concession. Henceforth the administration of the said concession shall be placed under the control of the Tientsin Defense Headquarters.

"However, no change shall be made in the structure, and even the British and American interests which are not hostile to Japan shall not be endangered, nor shall their private property be confiscated.

"Those who are residing within the concession, therefore, may pursue their legitimate business calmly in accordance with instructions of the Japanese Army. However, those who have committed hostile acts shall be severely dealt with, irrespective of their nationalities."

YOKOHAMA PLAYERS TAKE ALL 4 GAMES

Ladies' Team, However, Loses To Joshi Shihan Basketball Five

Yokohama Country and Athletic Club men's teams won all four games they played against outside opposition over the weekend. However, the club ladies' basketball squad dropped a close 27 to 25 decision to the Yokohama Joshi Shihan quintet to prevent the Y.C. and A.C. from making a clean sweep in its weekend schedule.

On Sunday afternoon the married members of the club defeated the single ones by 4 to 3 at hockey in the sole intra-club fixture.

In beating the Yokohama Shogyo Senmon College by 26 to 9 the Y.C. and A.C. rugby squad gained its eighth consecutive victory this season. The unbeaten and untied club 15 had a complete side for the first time this fall, and has amassed 282 points while the opponents' total amounts to 37.

The students gave the home contingent a hard fight during the first half and in the early stages of the second, but the latter drew away toward the end.

Pestalozzi Scores First

Pestalozzi opened the scoring with a try following a club forwards' rush, but a penalty placement awarded the students soon after found the mark and the count was tied at 3-all. The winners pressed hard and Eymard gathered up Harriss' kick within the visitors' 25 and sprinted across the line near the corner flag.

The Y.C. and A.C. pack continued its good work and dribbled the ball to within 10 yards of the opponents' line, after which Beatty plunged over for the next try. With the score being 9 to 3 against them, the students rallied strongly and a good three-quarters movement ended with the left winger reaching the goal line, the score becoming 9 to 6. With Agajan making the next try and Planas converting it just before the halftime whistle the club was ahead, 14 to 6, at the interval.

The students made a spirited rally after the rest period and made an unconverted try in seven minutes, the count becoming 14 to 9. The clubbers then resumed their strong attack which they maintained until the end for another four tries. Getting the scores were Eastlake, Weiss and two by Russell, none of which were converted.

Playing for the winners were J. J. Planas, E Eymard, E. Eastlake, M. Jalenques, M. L. Russell, F. R. Harriss (captain), E. Salter, G. E. Beatty, A. A. Weiss, M. Pestalozzi, M. V. Fachtmann, H. Schoene, W. Salter, G. Agajan and M. B. de Miranda.

The Y.C. and A.C. lady basketeers almost took the measure of the Yokohama champions in the casaba contest Saturday afternoon, but the latter staged a strong rally in the final minutes to win by one basket.

In the first half the victors held a 17 to 8 margin, but in the third and final quarters the homesters had the edge. The losers gained a two-point advantage with five minutes to go, but their opponents found the mark twice in succession with good floor shots to nose out the homesters.

Playing for the Y.C. and A.C. were Mrs. G. R. Fachtmann, lf., 4, Miss G. Andreis, lf., Miss M. Eymard, rf., 10, Miss M. Prohaska, rf., Miss H. Lord, c., 5, Miss R. Hardvendel, c., Miss M. Stevens, rg., Miss S. Bell, rg., 2, Miss T. Planas, lg., 4, and Miss M. Andreis, rg. The game was refereed by E. Eymard.

Gains 4th Victory

The Y.C. and A.C. men's basketball squad gained its fourth victory in as many starts by taking the Yokohama Commercial College Club quintet into camp by 64 to 31.

The first half was closed and the clubbers had only a 23 to 17 lead at the interval. However, the collegians wilted in the second stanza and the home team won going away.

The victors showed fine teamwork and the forwards combined unselfishly to work the ball under their opponents' basket with short fast passes. Both Planas and Max Fachtmann were in rare form and they rolled up 24 and 33 points, respectively.

The Y.C. and A.C. line-up follows: W. H. Blamey, rf., 5, J. J. Planas (captain), lf., 24, M. V. Fachtmann, c., 33, F. R. Harriss, lg., 2, and G. R. Fachtmann, rg.

Sharing the refereeing duties were S. G. Bielous and F. Planas.

The club's second soccer eleven kept pace with the rugger squad by gaining its eighth victory Sunday morning, the Yokohama Third Middle School Old Boys taking a 2 to 0 defeat.

The O.B. contingent, with the wind behind them in the first half, pressed almost the entire period but fine work by the club halves, fullbacks and goalie kept them at bay.

Midway through the second half the homesters staged a breakaway and Beatty found the net from close quarters to give the club a 1 to 0 lead. Near the end Planas' shot was deflected off a defender into the goal.

The home side included E. Eymard, J. J. Planas, C. Heseltine, J. A. Dixon (captain), M. Turner, G. E. Beatty, E. L. Gordes, C. Fernandes and U. Wendbladh, Captain A. G. Stevens refereed.

The Y.C. and A.C. first soccer squad resumed its winning ways by defeating the Tokyo K.S.F.E. eleven by 5 to 2 in a match played after the seconds were through.

The initial half was fairly even. Agajan was the first to find the mark, but the visitors equalized shortly before the interval.

Goals by Planas, Wendbladh and Agajan gave the clubbers a 4 to 1 margin before the former Kanto League runners-up could obtain their second point. Then Wendbladh beat the goalie again to end the scoring.

Both the club defense and attack functioned well. The forwards combined nicely with Makepeace doing good work in the center position.

Playing for the Y.C. and A.C. were F. R. Harriss, E. Eymard, H. Schoene (captain), M. Turner, M. L. Russell, M. B. de Miranda, W. H. Blamey, U. Wendbladh, G. W. Makepeace, J. J. Planas and G. Agajan.

After spotting the single men three goals the married members staged a good comeback to win the Y.C. and A.C. intra-club hockey match Sunday afternoon by 4 to 3. Both sides had one lady player as there was a shortage of men.

Grossman Plays Here

Grossman, the Kobe Regatta and Athletic Club hockey captain, played for the bachelors and he proved a tower of strength for them. He scored all three of his team's goals before the benedicts could get settled.

After Russell took over the married men's center-half assignment the winners attacked strongly and managed to equalize before the interval. Lord scored twice and Beatty once.

The second half was hard fought and the deciding goal was made by Lloyd midway through the period.

For the victors Mrs. Lloyd and Bond put up a strong defense, while Major Himatsinhji played a fine game in the nets. Ballantyne, Grossman and Stark showed up well for the losers.

The line-ups follow:

Married Men: Major K. S. Himatsinhji, F. J. Bond, Mrs. J. O. Lloyd, C. Heseltine, M. L. Russell, F. J. da Silva, P. H. Lord (captain), J. O. Lloyd, G. E. Beatty and C. Fernandes.

Single Men: E. Salter, S. G. Bielous, M. J. K. Stark, H. Schoene, A. H. Ballantyne (captain), G. Agajan, K. H. Blamey, Miss M. Stevens, A. A. Weiss, H. Grossman and J. J. Planas.

Professor H. J. Bird and S. E. Lord refereed the match.

With Prayer and Song for Victory

Top: From early dawn till darkness descends on the black-outed capital, thousands of Tokyo citizens throng the plaza of the Imperial Palace to pray for the welfare of Their Imperial Majesties and victory for the Imperial Army and Navy, now engaged in the most titanic struggle in history. Above: Hibiya Park was the scene of a giant "Smash America and Britain" song meeting at noon, Tuesday, as thousands of office workers and others joined in rousing choruses of patriotic songs to cheer the nation on to glorious triumph.

ROYAL NAVY USELESS FOR LANDING TROOPS

German Diplomatic Correspondent Sums Up Nazi Position Stacked Against Invasion

(With Germany firmly entrenched on Continental Europe, the power of the British Navy has diminished almost to a nominal existence. Great Britain may possibly possess some naval might of yore, but the man-of-war making up her navy cannot and dare not approach occupied Europe for the purpose of landing troops.

In an editorial of the Hamburger Fremdenblatt, Dr. Adolf Halfeld, the journal's diplomatic correspondent treats of the continent and sea power and arrives at the conclusion given above. Dr. Halfeld's views follow in toto:

"Two principles are struggling with each other: The Anglo-American claim to world domination of the seas, and the German conception of a European Continental space, which from inside is to prove strong and capable of living. The motives which are underlying the war of the English speaking nations are fundamentally of an economic nature. One need only vizualize the revolution in the international markets, which will be caused through the mobilization of all the riches of raw materials of the East, and one will understand without efforts that with such perspectives of the future the enemy side feels that many of the pillars of its economic world control are beginning to crack.

British Sea Might Gone

"In past history, Britain's economic weapon was repeatedly able to force the competitive power on the European Continent to its knees. In this war, however, the Bolshevist inability to hold back the German assault had a twofold effect, namely that one day there will be no front any longer on the soil of our Continent, and that in this titanic struggle proof was furnished that a naval power—the greatest in history—is not in the position to break the will of a continent of the intellectual level and the strength of Europe, which is uniformly directed, splendidly organized as to all its economic resources, and filled with the will to work in its most intensified form.

"The German campaign against Soviet Russia likewise constitutes only a partial action of the Erropean Continent in its defensive struggle against the will to destruction of the two English speaking Powers. With the moment when the United States went as far as to deny to the heroic Finns the right to self-defense, the spirits had finally to part company. Even to a sceptic it was bound to become evident that the threat from the East and from overseas originates basically from one common root, namely the interest of non-European Powers in Europe's permanent dependency through military, political or economic intimidation.

"The military aspect, the character and certainly also the length of the altercation between the two oceanic Powers and the European Continent will be decisively influenced by these greater associations of ideas.

Roosevelt Alone in Aim

"The will to discord of the U.S.A., the grotesque drama of a President who runs after war without being able to declare it or wishing to do so, is, therefore, only partly the outcome of inner-American resistance against an open participation in the war. Where would General Pershing be able to land his American Expeditionary Force? The French ports which in 1917 erected triumphal arches for the Doughboys of the wild and wooly west, are today unassailable bases of the Reich for its operations against the British Isles and on the Atlantic.

"According to the opinion of leading personages in the U.S.A. 8,000,000 would be necessary in order to risk an attack against the mailed fist of the European Continent. However, the assembling of such a gigantic force would mean a total war for the U.S.A. with all the grave consequences which it would have for the economy of the U.S.A. For the time being the people of the U.S.A. is not ready to make these sacrifices, and not only because it is not willing to tighten its belt for Britain's greater honor. It feels also instinctively that no laurels can be gained in a fight against Germany. The Continent has become unassailable against sea power.

"Thus the U.S.A. especially after the legally authorized opening of the war zones to U.S. merchantships have for a long time left the basis of their former neutral policy without, however, deciding in favor of an open conflict. Anyone who wants to declare a war must also believe that he will be able to win it. No one should be inclined to underestimate the resources of the Amerihan Continent, however, the more the East is being opened up to it, the European Continent likewise is becoming a continent of unlimited economic resources. This is in the third war winter the real guarantee of German invincibility."

FINDS FRENCH AFRICA SUPPORTING PETAIN

Admiral Rene Platon Brings Back Encouraging Message From Tour of Colony

Transocean

VICHY, December 4.—The French Secretary of State for Colonies, Admiral Rene Platon, yesterday returned from his African tour. He was welcomed at the Vichy airdrome by the Chief of Marshal Philippe Petain's Civil Cabinet, Dunoulin de la Barathed, the Chief of the General Staff of the Colonial Forces, General Roucaud, Lieutenant-Colonel Phezet as representative of Admiral Francois Darlan, the Vice-Premier, and representatives of the Ministry of the Colonies.

In a statement to press representatives, Admiral Platon stressed that his observations during his 15,000-kilometer inspection tour through the French West African colonies convinced him that the situation was completely satisfactory in every respect.

"Under the leadership of Governor-General Pierre Boisson of French West Africa, who is not only an excellent administrator but also a born leader of men, the West African colonies are doing good work. That is one of the most important impressions of my tour.

"French West Africa stands behind the Marshal as one man. That is the best news which I am bringing home.

"I visited schools and asked the children: 'Do you know who is Marshal Petain?' The children replied: 'Yes, we know. He serves France,'" Minister Platon said.

He then briefly discussed the question of defense of the French African possessions. He assured the representatives of the international press that everything had been done to strengthen defenses in Africa in order to discourage those who might feel inclined to attack the French empire. The morale of the French African troops was excellent. The soldiers were prepared to defend the French empire, Minister Platon asserted in conclusion.

SINO-JAPAN TREATY FULFILLS TWO AIMS

Desire of Nippon and China to Emancipate Asia Finds Concrete Expression

C.P.S.

SHANGHAI, November 29.—The Sino-Japanese Treaty of Basic Relations signed on November 30, 1940, writes the New China Daily News in its editorial today, is a concrete expression of the desire on the part of both China and Japan struggle for China's independence and the emancipation of Asia. In the Treaty, Japan recognizes China's territorial integrity and political independence, while China is willing to cooperate closely with Japan in military, economic and cultural matters.

"During the past one year, China has done everything in her power to discharge her obligations under that Treaty, and, although we are still far away from complete fulfilment of the treaty terms and full materialization of nation-wide peace, we should realize that this gigantic task cannot be accomplished in a single day or without exerting our greatest efforts," states the editorial.

Internally, the paper goes on to state, both the Kuo-Min Tang Party and the National Government have been strengthened by abolishing various other parties, by forming the China Foundation of the East Asia League and by launching the Rural Pacification Campaign.

Diplomatically, continues the journal, China's position in the family of Nations has been firmly established through the recognition of her National Government by Germany, Italy and other European countries and through China's adherence to the Anti-Comintern Pact.

In conclusion, the paper says, "Although these achievements still fall far short of our highest ideals, we have the consolation to know that we are following the right beliefs and principles."

SPECIAL JEW DIVISION MADE IN BRITISH ARMY

Jewish Youths Not Rushing to Colors as Volunteers—Leaders Considering Force

Transocean

ANKARA, December 4.—The Head of the Press Department of the Jewish Agency in Jerusalem told Jewish press representatives that negotiations had been concluded in London for the purpose of establishing an independent Jewish division in the British Far Eastern Army.

He pointed out that Jewish troops would be extracted from other British units in the Near East for enlistment in the Jewish division.

In addition, he declared, a more intensive recruiting campaign among the Jewish population of Palestine was necessary and the Jews would have to do their utmost "to justify expectations with which the Palestine Jews have now been entrusted.

He complained, however, that Jewish youths were not rushing to the colors as volunteers as might be expected. Jewish leaders are now considering measures to force Jewish youngsters in Palestine into military service in the Jewish division, he added.

ROOSEVELT'S POLICY DROVE U.S. INTO WAR

For Years Japan Experienced Unfriendly, Hostile Acts From Part of President

The American people have now reached the point to which they were driven by President Roosevelt's policy. Not without gravely neglecting their duty, the chosen representatives of the Americans had permitted Roosevelt again and again to violate the sound principles of the Monroe Doctrine, says a Deutsche Diplomatisch-Politische Korrespondenz. President Roosevelt who had been elected under the slogan "Keep the United States out of War," had by and by torn down the barriers which a few years ago the legislation of the United States had erected in order to prevent American participation in future wars. President Roosevelt who continuously interfered with other foreign Powers in realms far outside of the Western Hemisphere, who made demands upon them which were incompatible with their honor and sovereignty, and who openly menaced to take measures threatening their existence, has now reaped the fruit of his provocations: the clash with Japan, the ally of European Axis Powers.

For years Japan had experienced nothing but unfriendly and even openly hostile acts from the part of President Roosevelt. Its vigorous determination to establish a new order in the Greater East Asiatic realm, met with the strongest opposition of those who had profited from existing conditions. While Japan had never interfered with the affairs of the Western Hemisphere in the least the United States who had gained access to the Far East only by robbing Spain of Philippines, had tried to play the role of an umpire whose orders—one would like to know because of which legitimate claim—had to be strictly obeyed.

Japan as well as the two European Axis Powers tried with incredible patience to make the present rulers of the United States realize that they had better look after their own affairs and leave the reorganization of foreign realms to those entitled to undertake it. President Roosevelt, however, persisted in his interventionist policy always more shamelessly. He openly took sides with the party in which he was interested for one reason or another, and supported it in a manner irreconcilable with the most elementary notions of neutrality. He even boasted of his unneutral actions and did everything to abolish the last vestiges of "neutrality." In other ways President Roosevelt also tried to make use of every chance to reinforce the military positions of the United States and to penetrate into realms which had nothing at all to do with the security of the Western Hemisphere.

Created Bases in N. Atlantic

In the same manner in which he created bases in the North Atlantic in order to attack at the opportune moment those who refused to take his orders on the European Continent, he occupied positions in all other parts of the globe. The whole measure of Roosevelt's irresponsibility and lack of conscience became apparent however, in his entering an alliance with Bolshevism and urging Britain to declare war upon the small Finnish democracy only because it did not wish to surrender itself to its executioner. Something else he shared with Stalin: The intention to choose the moment himself in which he would deliver the decisive blow. What President Roosevelt's intentions were against Japan, his loudspeakers in Washington have made sufficiently clear.

In October already Senator Pepper, one of his mouthpieces in the Foreign Affairs Committee of the Senate declared the United States ought to eliminate Japan and destroy the Japanese, Italian and German fleets. On November 25, the same Senator declared that the United States was not far from a war with Japan. The declaration of war was only a formality which could be dispensed with as long as that "bunch of robbers" was wielding the power. Secretary of the Navy Knox expressed his conviction before a group of munitions manufacturers that Japan would not abandon its expansionist policy. A clash between the United States and Japan would thus become inevitable. Knox added that he was greatly pleased that the Japanese did not intend to give up their expansionist plans.

Representative May, however, the Chairman of the Military Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives, openly stated that, if Japan did not abandon its plans in the Southeast of Asia, the United States would wipe it from the face of the globe.

Senator Pepper Speaks

Neither could Japan have any doubts as to the methods which Roosevelt would try to apply. Numerous are the utterances of leading Americans who urged immediate and speedy action against Japan. Again it was Senator Pepper who in May demanded the occupation of all important points in the Far East, and that the Japanese fleet be locked up in its own backyard. A few airplanes would be sufficient to destroy Tokyo. On December 1, Mr Connally, the Chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the Senate, stated in connection with the danger of war with Japan, that the United States had a Navy in the Pacific which knows how to shoot. That President Roosevelt has no qualms about giving shooting orders has already become apparent from his behavior toward Germany.

Already in July, Secretary of the Navy Knox had revealed before the Senate, that an American destroyer had chased a German submarine and attacked it with depth charges. In his address of September 11, President Roosevelt finally informed the public that he had ordered the United States Navy not only to open fire on German naval forces without the slightest provocation, but to go out of its way to meet them. The undeclared "shooting war," i.e. the sudden attack in Wild West manner, had thus been proclaimed a basic principle of the North American Union, and whoever refuses to obey Roosevelt's command must reckon with similar actions.

When Japan became aware of President Roosevelt's refusal to acknowledge its unshakable determination to create a new order in the East Asia Co-Prosperity Sphere and of his demanding instead that Japan abandon everything, it had achieved so far to bring about that order, no more doubts could exist as to the intentions of the United States President: To choke Japan economically, to complete its military encirclement, and to crush it at the opportune moment.

Japan has answered these provocations and this menace to its own national existence by shattering Roosevelt's sinister plot in time. Today already it has the satisfaction of seeking Thailand upon which strong pressure had been exerted by the two Anglo-Saxon Powers, choose the side of the Power fighting for a new order in the East Asia Co-Prosperity Sphere. Japan will fulfill the task which both its geographical position and the course of the history have assigned to it, and protect the Far Eastern realm from the greedy ambitions of foreign Powers.

Oldest Regimental Colors

The regimental colors of a certain unit is the oldest one now in existence. The colors was awarded by the late Emperor Meiji in 1874, the sixth year of the Meiji Era. To glorify the colors, a painting was drawn by Kiyoe Kobayashi and was dedicated to the unit. The other painting, drawn by the same artist, is a battle in South China, where the unit fought with the colors.

INDIA KEEPS ALIVE INDEPENDENCE FIRE

Desire Burning to Run Government With Free Hand but British Stamp Down

According to a recent Transocean report from Stockholm, Mr. Amery, British Minister for Indian Affairs, delivered a speech in the House of Commons refuting India's demand for the establishment of dominion status, says an editorial in the Central China Daily News.

Though this telegram is seemingly unimportant, yet in reality it reveals the anti-British sentiments prevailing at present among the Indians. In other words, it indicates at least that India intends to free herself from the yoke of the British Empire. As understood, the British Empire is founded on its vast colonial possessions, of which India is the most important pillar. We can even say that without India, there would be no British Empire.

Dr. Sun Evaluates India

Dr. Sun Yat-Sen, the late National Father of China, says in "The Vital problem of China": "What is the foundation of the British Empire?. . . It is the possession of India that enables Britain to control such a vast extent of colonial land all over the globe. It is India that has made London the center of the world market. It is India also that enable Britain to occupy the leading position in Europe and to do whatever she likes in the world in the name of the King of England, generally known as 'King of the United Kingdom and Emperor of India.' From all this it is clear how important India is for the British Empire."

India has been under the control of the British Empire since 1858 when a Victoria Declaration was issued to the effect that India was a part of the British territory. As a matter of fact, India has long been hovering between life and death owing to the fact that she has had to suffer all her natural resources and manpower to be exploited by the British Empire. Since the issuance of the Victoria Declaration, Britain has employed the following methods for ruling India: (1) Suppression of rebellions among the natives; (2) Efforts to effect a unification of India through economic means; (3) Establishment of a British political system in India. The British methods have proved to be a serious restriction on the actions of the Indians.

Britain Stamp Down Outcries

India is too important for the British Empire to loosen its hold. Therefore, Britain is not only intensifying her oppression of India but also practicing all kinds of corruption in that country. Naturally, the Indians are not to blame if they should stage any revolts against the British.

When talking about the Independence Movement in India, one cannot help mentioning Mr. Ghandi, whose anti-British movement however is limited only to civil disobedience. In other words, it is aimed at securing independence for India through peaceful methods.

Mr. Ghandi once said: "Cruelty in the behavior of a beast. . . Non-slaughter in the strongest weapon and the best virtue of mankind. . . ."

Last July, Mr. Ghandi issued "A Word to Britain," levelling criticism at Britain's war against Germany. A part of the message reads as follows: "I am now telling Britain that she must cease her hostile actions against her enemy, because war means, fundamentally, destruction. If Britain desires to wipe out Nazism, she certainly cannot achieve her aim through war." It is not difficult for us to know of the political ideas of Mr. Ghandi from these few words.

Ghandi Views Shared

Apart from the Independence Movement under the leadership of Mr. Ghandi, there are also other parties in India that advocate the formation of an anti-British front, such as the so-called "National Congress" and "Left Wing." Though this Independence Movement has suffered a serious blow from the high-handed methods of the British Government, there is no denying the fact that anti-British sentiments are growing among the Indians.

The reason given by Mr. Amery for rejecting India's demand for dominion status is. "The time for Britain to accept such a demand has not yet arrived because the Indians have still no unity. . . . Moreover, the British Government is now engaged in a life-and-death struggle, so there is no reason for India to demand the establishment of a dominion status at this moment." It seems that India must make sacrifices for Britain and stop her Independence Movement.

During the last World War India was promised, "self-government," but the promise has never been fulfilled. Experience is the best teacher! India should not forget the lesson she received during the first European War.

BID OF U.S.-BRITAIN FOR NAVY WAR FINIS

Masanori Ito, Noted Naval Commentator, Predicts Beginning Of Guerrilla Battle

The beginning of a guerrilla naval warfare in the Pacific by the American and British naval forces, with the destruction of their major capital ships within a short space of three days by the Japanese was viewed by Masanori Ito, Japan's noted commentator on naval affairs and a director of the Japan Times and Advertiser in a special interview Thursday, the naval expert continued:

"The commencement of this naval sniping will mean that the war in the Pacific will drag out. The Americans and the British will try to disintegrate Japan's line of communications in the Pacific and at the same time attempt to effect an economic blockade.

"The assault on Hawaii by the Japanese Navy will go down in history as one of the most brilliant naval exploits, throwing the 1940 battle of Taranto when the British made an onslaught on this naval port in Italy completely into the shade. From the point of distance, number of ships sunk and the method of attack, this naval attack was dramatic.

"The number of American capital ships sent to Davy Jones locker numbered two while four others were heavily battered. It will take some time to repair them in Pearl Harbor as the facilities there are not comparable with those on the mainland. In effect, the heavy injuries inflicted on these four ships means that the American ships in Hawaii have been reduced by six.

40% Strength Lost

"The loss of these men-of-war means a reduction of about 40 per cent in the capital ship strength of the American navy at Hawaii where there were 14 of such ships. The retrieval of this reduced fighting strength will take some years. The four ships are as good as lost.

"At the present time, the United States is engaged in a large naval construction program, America claims that 15 capital ships are now under construction but it is known from reliable sources that keels have been laid to only 5 capital ships. Even assuming that three ships will be completed in 1942 and two or at most four in 1943, it would take two years before the United States can bring its fleet in Hawaii up to the fighting par existing before the Japanese onslaught."

Masanori Ito recalled that the naval experts in America had stated that 14 capital ships were insufficient in launching an offensive attack against the island of Japan and added, with a glowing smile:

"The United States can't therefore assault Japan in 1943 and it's very doubtful whether it can do it in 1944. In other words, when the Japanese Navy hammered at Pearl Harbor on December 8, it definitely sealed the activities of the American men-of-war to the eastern Pacific for sometime to come."

English Down 30%

The noted commentator indicated that the loss of the Prince of Wales and Repulse on Wednesday clipped the British Far Eastern Fleet of 20 to 30 per cent of its fighting power.

"It is significant," he stated, "that the Japanese destroyed these two ships almost simultaneously. The capital ships possessed by England total 13 and it is expected that the Jericho and the Duke of York will be completed about March of next year. It is very doubtful, however, whether the British will ever recuperate from the losses incurred on Wednesday by the year 1943."

He claimed that this smashing broadside on the American and British fleets was a "superhuman" victory. The attacks just killed the possibility of any offensive, single or combined, against Japan, he added.

In picturing the next development in the Pacific naval warfare, Masanori Ito indicated that there was a possibility now of a guerrilla warfare on the Pacific by the American and British ships. He urged that the people of Japan be prepared for the new naval operations that may take place in the Pacific.

"This guerrilla war on the seas will be conducted by the American and British destroyers, cruisers, submarines and aircraft carriers. It will probably try to bottle up Japan economically or attempt to obstruct and interfere with Japan's lines of communications," he concluded.

Indonesians Strive for Liberty Stirred by War

ing of various peoples in Asia had not left them untouched. India was stirring, voices were heard in the Philippines (the Filipinos had just succeeded in establishing the Philippine Assembly). But the strongest impetus to the nationalist movement was perhaps the Japanese victory over Russia three years before. This, in the eyes of all Asiatics, was something great and admirable.

An organization, the Boedi Oetomo ("The Beautiful Aim"), the equivalent of the Liga Filipina, was organized with Dr. Soetomo, a physician like our own Rizal, as one of the leading spirits. The organization had a cultural program and had little or no political significance. In the meantime others had organized the Indische Partij (Indian Party), which was more radical than the Boedi Oetomo, and had leaders like Douwes Dekker, Tjipto Mangoen Koesoemo and Ki Hadjar Dewantara as leaders. This organization included not only Indonesians among its members but Indo-Europeans (mestizos) as well; Dekker was of mixed Javanese and Dutch ancestry.

At the same time a religious organization, the Sarekat Islam (Islamic Union) was started by the merchant class. Purely religious in nature and purpose at first, its activities later developed a strong political color, so much so that it became closely allied with the Sarekat Rakjat a party with Communist tendencies. The resulting agitation finally reached boiling point in 1926 during the Communist revolt which broke out that year. The masses had become convinced that the Dutch rule could be overthrown only by revolt, but their attempts were stopped in no time. The leaders were imprisoned and the party dissolved.

Word 'Indonesia' Taboo

Many of the leaders of the Indonesian nationalist movement were sons of well-to-do families and were able to go to Europe, in Holland particularly, to study. The University of Leyden always could boast of a large number of Indonesian students. There they were better able to reflect upon the condition of their countrymen at home. Their furtive spirit of nationalism had an outlet in the organization to which most of the students belonged, the Perhimpunan Indonesia.

In this fashion, the word Indonesia, which had no standing in anthropological circles, first acquired a political meaning. It came to mean national unity. Therefore the government made it taboo; yet the word and its significance spread just the same.

Members of the Perhimpunan became the most rabid nationalists and assumed leadership of the movement upon their return to Indonesia. These included: Mohammed Hatta (exiled), Sartono, Iskaq, Soernarjo and Staroloeljono. The cry for a free Indonesia went up throughout the country and was heard even in the streets. Bandoeng, where the Partij Nasional Indonesia was later founded, became the center of political agitation. Under the leadership of Iskaq, Sartono and Soekarno, its program, like that of Gandhi in India, called for non-cooperation as a means of advancing the cause of Indonesian freedom. The government soon became alarmed, however, and threw the leaders in jail.

Demand For Reform

At this point, Dr. Soetomo, who was one of the founders of the Boedi Oetomo, tried to unite all the islands (the political agitation had hitherto been confined to Java alone) in the nationalist movement under the Parindra. The movement still had the same aim; to free Indonesia from Dutch rule.

When it became apparent that the cry for a free Indonesia was hopeless, the leaders looked around for a different slogan. Soetarjo, a member of the Volksraad, proposed a dominion status which proved to be unpopular and was soon forgotten. Then there was the Gerindo, a party of the poor, which denounced the Parindra, as a party of the bourgeoisie, and itself advocated genuine democracy.

The latest political development in Indonesia is represented by the Gapi which advocates a full, free parliament where the Indonesian people will be truly represented and, through their duly elected representatives, make their own laws. The early revolutionary temper of the movement seems to have gradually developed into a demand for specific and adequate reforms—economic, political and educational.

Today, most of the influential nationalist leaders are either dead or in exile. Dr. Soetomo and Thamrin are gone. Thamrin, who was a member of the Volksraad, has been replaced by Soekardjo Wirjopranoto, a leader of the Parindra, who incidentally attended the inauguration of the Philippine Commonwealth in 1935.

fairs Division of the Yokosuka Naval Station, who has become prominent as the author of several patriotic poems, has composed the words for a new "Song of the Rise of the Nation." The poem, which was written on the evening of the day when Japan declared war on America and Great Britain, is to admonish the people to exert their utmost for final victory. Kosaku Yamada, the famed composer, is now reported to be writing the music for the new song.

Ichiro Fujiyama, popular baritone, will leave Tokyo December 22 for the Kansai, where he has booked for a week's tour of appearances in Kobe, Osaka, and Nagoya. He will participate in several concerts of national and patriotic music.

In the course of its current visit to the Kansai, the New Symphony Orchestra will hold its second program at the Asahi Kaikan, Osaka, 7 p.m. today, under the baton of Kazuo Yamada, young composer-conductor who took over the direction of the concerts at the last hour. Motonari Iguchi, assistant professor of the Tokyo Academy of Music, will appear as the piano soloist in Liszt's "Hungarian Phantasy" and "Danse Macabre." The orchestra numbers include Mozart's Symphony No. 39, in E flat major, and Wagner's Overture to the opera, "Tannhaeuser."

Under the auspices of the Young People's Symphony Appreciation Society, the Tokyo Symphony Orchestra will appear in the Tenth Symphony Appreciation Concert for Young People, 1:30 p.m. today and Sunday, at the Hibiya Public Hall. Professor Manfred Gurlitt will conduct. A musical talk on "The Form of the Concerto," illustrated with musical performances, will be given by Jiro Baba.

Miss Kazuko Kusuma will be presented as the piano soloist in a performance of Chopin's Piano Concerto No. 2, in F minor. The orchestra will play the "Symphony Pastorale" from Handel's oratorio, "The Messiah"; "Dance of the Hours," and "Waltz," from Delibes' "Coppelia" ballet; and Mozart's Serenade for Strings in G major, "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik."

The usual open singing class following the interval will be directed by Shuichi Tsugawa, who will teach the entire audience to sing a two-part canon which he has arranged with Japanese words, from an original composition by Berton.

The Tokyo Symphony Orchestra has announced that all its concerts planned for the remainder of the season will be held as scheduled. The announcement stresses the importance of the continuation of musical life during the time of national emergency.

Shuichi Tsugawa, Japanese authority on church music, will hold the last of this year's monthly lectures in the series titled "Johann Sebastian Bach: A Study of his Life, Personality, and Musical Works," 7 to 9 p.m. today, at the Shinjuku Christian Church. Today's subject will be the Advent Cantatas. Selections from the music played on records will illustrate the lecture.

Miss Taneko Seki, soprano, will offer vocal solos in a concert sponsored by the Japan Harmonica Music Research Society, 7 p.m. today, at the Sangyo Kaikan. Performances will be given by the Japan Harmonica Music Research Society Orchestra conducted by Shogo Kawaguchi and others, and harmonica solos will be played by Masami Nakamura, Shinki Nambu, Seitaro Morimoto, Minoru Homma, and others.

The first vocal recital by Miss Chieko Komori, soprano, who has appeared in several recent opera performances by the Fujiwara Opera Company, will be held at the Nihon Seinenkan, 7 p.m. today. Accompanied at the piano by Miss Aiko Kurosawa, the singer will be heard in lieder by Franz, Schubert, Schumann, Brahms, and Wolf; opera selections from Mascagni's "Cavaleria Rusticana" and Puccini's "La Boheme," and in Japanese songs by Hideo Saito and Toraji Onaka.

Arrangements of Japanese pieces for a combination of Japanese and Western instruments will be played by the Toyo Orchestra, conducted by Takeo Hirayama, 12:30 p.m. today, over the national radio program.

Four Sports Events Slated at Y.C.A.C.; Home Team Girls to Play Shirakiku Five

Weekend sports at the Yokohama Country and Athletic Club this weekend will consist of rugby, soccer, basketball and tennis.

This afternoon there will be two basketball games. The opener will be the contest between the Y.C. and A.C. ladies' squad and the Shirakiku quintette, while the nightcap will see the club men's team opposed by the Kosho Old Boys.

The home team girls have improved steadily during the past month and last week gave the Yokohama champions a battle royal, losing by only one basket. Today's fracas should prove another good contest and the Y.C. and A.C. quintette has a good chance to turn the tables on the Shirakiku contingent who won the previous encounter. The game is scheduled for 3:30 p.m.

The Y.C. and A.C. men basketeers have won all four tilts in which they have taken part this season and have improved steadily as a team. They are expected to make a strong bid for their fifth straight win today in their game with the Kosho O.B. which is set for 5 p.m.

On Sunday morning the club's rugby squad is scheduled to play the Meiji Seimei fifteen at 11 a.m. The Y.C. and A.C. ruggerites have made an impressive record this fall, having won all eight matches they played and rolling up 282 points while their opponents' grand total stands at 37. The insurance men, however, are said to have some fine players and the home squad may have a hard fight on its hands.

The first soccer match Sunday afternoon will be between the Y.C. and A.C.'s second eleven and the St. Joseph's College team at 2 p.m. The club seconds also have done well this fall, being unbeaten and untied in their eight tilts to date. The students have a good side and unless the home contingent plays at its best its winning streak may be stopped at eight straight.

The second association football tilt Sunday afternoon will see the Y.C. and A.C. first play a return game with the Tokyo K.S.F.E. eleven at 3 p.m. The former gained a 5 to 2 decision over the players from the capital last week, and the latter are expected to fight at their hardest to even their account with the port city squad this weekend.

A number of tennis matches in the various events of the club's autumn tennis tournament will no doubt be played off this weekend if the fine weather continues.

All members who have been notified and any others who want a game are requested to turn out for the winter sports events.

THAILAND PREMIER HOPED FOR ALLIANCE

Has Children in U.S. and Britain but Went Ahead to Support Japan

Domei

BANGKOK, December 11.—Prime Minister Luang Pibul Songgram is reported to have determined to carry out a reorganization of the Thai Cabinet in order to strengthen the national structure to face the present emergency situation. It is believed that the reorganization will be made within several days.

Asahi Service

BANGKOK, December 12.—For Thai to come to understanding with Japan for the conclusion of a defensive-offensive alliance is the greatest decision ever made in the national history. The responsibility of Premier Luang Pibul Songgram, who has risen to maintain the independence of Thai and to create a new nation by uniting the fifteen million people of the country, is, of course great, but he has expressed his firm resolution in the following words:

"I wish it to be thoroughly understood that Thai has not decided to make this alliance after seeing the success of the Japanese war against the United States and Great Britain. Because of the strained Far Eastern situation up to the present it was already expected that Thai would come to war with the United States and Great Britain at any time, but I always thought that Thai should never confront Japan.

"I have four children, but the eldest son is in England, and the second son and the first daughter are in the United States for study. I have only one child with me now. The United States and Great Britain attempted to make me change my policy with my children as hostages. But I never regret that for the sake of my mother country I would sacrifice my children."

The Premier sent telegrams of congratulation to the Japanese Army and Navy on their glorious victory.

BRITISH INTRIGUE FAILS

Trying to Take Over Portuguese Possessions in Pacific

Domei

SHANGHAI, December 12.—According to reports reaching here recently, the British Government has been making frantic efforts to induce the Portuguese Government to agree to place its Pacific possessions under the protection of Britain, but thus far without avail.

In rejecting the British request the Portuguese Government pointed out that Japan respects the Portuguese sovereignty, and that placement of the possessions under protection of Britain at this juncture would give rise to unnecessary complication of the situation, the reports add.

The Cultural Department expects all the poems by December 25. Then those judged as best among the collection will be set to music by the Japan Musical Culture Association. The poems and their music will then be made into gramophone records so that the public will have a chance to hear these selected poems.

Meantime, arrangements have been made by the Japan Broadcasting Corporation that there will be an hour for the recitation of patriotic poems in the daily radio program for five days starting Friday. The first hour was realized at 7:50 a.m. Friday. The recitation of a few best patriotic poems by the three best contemporary poets, namely, Yone Noguchi, Kotaro Takamura and Tsumeo Osada were broadcast over the national network. The hour will be daily put on till next Tuesday, December 16.
